NCCU REACCREDITED BY ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES & SCHOOLS

North Carolina Central University's accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, the principal accrediting agency for colleges and universities in the southern United States, has been reaffirmed.

The action was taken Tuesday, December 11, at the association's annual meeting in Atlanta, Ga.

The Southern Association reevaluates its accreditation of colleges and universities every ten years. The process includes a self-study by the institution and an on-site visit by a team of educators and educational administrators from other institutions in the region.

North Carolina Central

University's self-study and the inspection by the visiting team were completed during the 1978-79 academic year.

NCCU had been granted permission to conduct a "non-traditional" self study.

Such permission is given to institutions which have consistently met basic requirements for accreditation. The schools conducting non-traditional self-studies design their own self-study program to meet what they consider their own special needs.

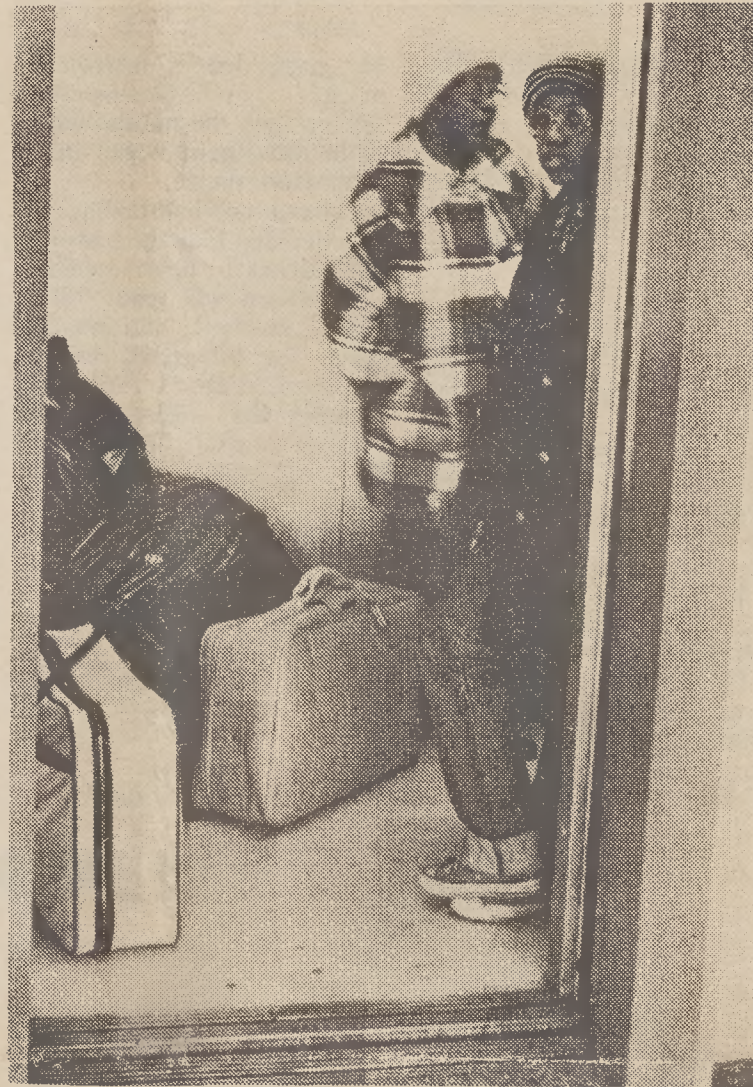

North Carolina Central's self-study was the design and implementation of a new planning and budgeting system, intended to achieve goals in line with long-range plans.

The visitation committee evaluated the university on the basis of its effectiveness in accomplishing the goals of the non-traditional self-study. A list of recommendations and suggestions for improvement of the planning design was generated by the committee.

This recent action, the formal reaccreditation, represented the approval of the member institutions, through their representatives, of the visitation committee's favorable report on the university.

Representing NCCU at the Southern Association meeting was Dr. Cecil L. Patterson, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

—MOVING BACK IN FOR THE SECOND SEMESTER—

The Campus Echo camera caught Denise Jones, a sophomore Home Economics major from Goldsboro, N.C. at the elevator on the 8th floor in Baynes Hall. In addition to her luggage, Denise seems to have brought back many memories of her Christmas holidays at home. Over 5000 students have matriculated at Central for the spring semester.

N.C. CENTRAL ADVISOR DECLARED NATIONAL HERO BY COMMISSION

By LARRY D. REVELLE
Editor-In-Chief

WAYNE MAURICE DUNN

The Carnegie Hero Fund Commission recently named 27-year-old Wayne Maurice Dunn, a former counselor in North Carolina Central University's Academic Skills Center, as one of 12 national heroes for 1979.

The honor is given annually by the Carnegie Fund

Commission in Pittsburgh to spotlight rescues involving extraordinary life risks by people living in the United States and Canada.

Dunn drowned May 30, 1979 in a strong surf near Pine Knoll Shores while trying to save Janice Annette Harper who is also a counselor in Central's Academic Skills Center.

The two were attending a pre-school workshop session with 13 other staffers when the tragedy occurred.

Miss Harper got caught up in a strong tide and was swept out to sea. After Dunn realized that she couldn't swim, he quickly swam to her rescue and brought her most of the way back before he became tired and drifted off in the heavy current. His body was found several hours later.

Dunn was well-liked, respected and highly admired by his co-workers and the NCCU student body. Interviews with Dunn's closest associates show that he was "one of a kind" and "everybody's friend."

According to University sources, the NCCU faculty senate is considering a request to officially name the building which houses the Academic Skills Center after Dunn.

Dunn was a native of New York and moved to Durham after matriculating at Shaw University. He began working at Central in 1977.

EX-UMBRA, North Carolina Central's highly acclaimed literary magazine is now accepting poetry, prose, and short stories for its next publication.

The deadline for submitting material is Tuesday, February 12, at 5 p.m.

The EX-UMBRA office is located in room 104-A of the Elder Student Union.
