Five Promoted To Full Professor

Five faculty members at the Medical Center have been promoted to full professors, according to Provost Frederic N. Cleaveland.

Four of the academic changes are in the Department of Medicine, while the fifth is in the Department of Psychiatry.

Those named to professorships in medicine were Drs. James R. Clapp, Johannes A. Kylstra, Harry T. McPherson and Wendell F. Rosse.

Dr. Clapp, a 1957 graduate of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, took his postgraduate training at the Southwestern Medical School in Dallas, Tex. He came to Duke in 1963 as an associate in medicine and rose to assistant professor in 1965 and associate professor in 1968. He retains his title as associate professor of physiology.

Dr. Kylstra received both his M.D. and Ph.D. in physiology at the University of Leiden in the Netherlands. Following postdoctoral training in Albany, N.Y., he was on the faculty at the University of Leiden and the State University of New York in Buffalo. He came to Duke as assistant professor of medicine and physiology in 1965 and was promoted to associate professor of medicine the following year. He retains his title as associate professor of physiology.

An associate professor of medicine since 1959, Dr. McPherson received both his medical degree and postgraduate training at Duke University. He was appointed associate in the department of medicine in 1955 and assistant professor in 1958.

Dr. Rosse earned an M.S. in physiology at the University of Nebraska and a medical degree at the University of Chicago. He took his postdoctoral training at Duke. In 1968 he was named an associate professor of medicine at Duke and in the same year won the "Golden Apple" Award for outstanding medical teaching. In 1970 he was appointed associate professor of immunology, a post which he retains.

Dr. Rosse is also presently chief of the immuno-hematology section and co-director of the Blood Bank at Duke.

Promoted to full professor in the department of psychiatry was Dr. Erdman B. Palmore. Dr. Palmore came to Duke in 1967 as associate professor of both medical sociology and sociology. Previously he had faculty appointments at Finch College and Yale University. He received his master's in sociology at the University of Chicago in 1954 and his doctorate at Columbia University in 1959.

Dr. Wolfgang Joklik Appointed To James B. Duke Professorship

A Medical Center faculty member has been named to a James B. Duke Professorship, the University's top academic honor.

Appointed to the distinguished chair was Dr. Wolfgang K. Joklik, professor and chairman of the Department of Microbiology and Immunology. The appointment, effective July 1, was announced by Duke Provost Frederic N. Cleaveland.

Also named J. B. Duke Professors were Dr. Juanita M. Kreps, professor of economics; Dr. Aubrey W. Naylor, professor of botany; and F. Hodge O'Neal, professor of law. All were honored at a dinner April 19.

Dr. Joklik, noted for his research in the field of cell biology and virology, has been chairman of the Department of Microbiology and Immunology since he came to the University in 1968. Prior to that, he was Siegfried Ullman Professor of Cell Biology at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City.

He received his bachelor and masters degrees in biochemistry from the University of Sydney, Australia, and his doctorate in virology from Oxford University, England.

Dr. Joklik holds a number of distinguished appointments including membership on the Research Career Award Committee of the National Institute of General Medical Sciences; editor of the publication Virology; associate editor of the Journal of Biological Chemistry; and president of the virology division of the American Society for Microbiology.

Elevator No. 5 by Howland Ward, scheduled for completion May 1, will be out of use for an indefinite period. The Otis Elevator Company notified the Medical Center that their installers have gone on strike. The Planning Office regrets this added period of inconvenience to staff, patients and visitors.
