

Georgiade Succeeds Pickrell As Head of Surgery Division

Dr. Nicholas Georgiade, professor of plastic, maxillofacial and oral surgery at the medical center, has been named to succeed Dr. Kenneth Pickrell as chief of the Division of Plastic and Maxillofacial Surgery.

Announcement of the appointment, which will become effective July 1, came from Dr. David C. Sabiston, chairman of the Department of Surgery.

Pickrell, who has been a member of the faculty and chief of the division since 1944, will remain at Duke as professor of plastic and maxillofacial surgery. He will continue his activities in patient care, teaching and research.

Since Georgiade was named assistant professor of plastic, maxillofacial and oral surgery at Duke in 1954, he has achieved international prominence in his specialty.

In May, he was elected vice president of the American Association of Plastic Surgeons at the organization's annual meeting in Phoenix, Ariz. The American Association of Plastic Surgeons, of which Georgiade served as secretary for the past three years, is the oldest society of plastic surgeons in the world.

The surgeon, who is also past president of the American Society of Maxillofacial Surgeons, has been chairman of the Advisory Committee in Plastic and Maxillofacial Surgery to the American College of Surgeons, chairman of the section of Plastic, Maxillofacial and Reconstructive Surgery of the American Medical Association, vice chairman of the Plastic Surgery Residency Review Committee and vice chairman of the American Board of Plastic Surgery.

In addition, Georgiade is international editor of the Cleft Palate Journal, associate editor of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery Journal and member of more than 25 professional and honorary societies.

He serves as consultant to the U.S. Army and Air Force, the Veterans Administration and the National

A native of Lowell, Mass., Georgiade received his undergraduate education at Fordham University, a doctorate in dental surgery at Columbia in 1944 and his M.D. degree at Duke in 1949.

Georgiade's chief clinical research interests lie in reconstruction of the breast and the repair of congenital and accidental deformities of the facial area.

Aitken Stars In Award-Winning Chaplaincy Filmstrip

Medical Center Chaplain Wes Aitken is the central figure in an award-winning film strip produced by the Methodist Church.

The film strip, "What Is a Chaplain?" received the Paul M. Hinkhouse Communications Award, the grand award in the audiovisual class of competition sponsored by the Religious Public Relations Council in Washington.

The award was won by Dr. Edwin H. Maynard, editorial assistant, United Methodist Communications of Evanston, Ill.

Numerous other chaplains serving different ministries are pictured in the film, but the major focus is on Aitken and his role as a hospital chaplain, the position he has held at Duke fulltime since 1956.

Initial work on the film began two years ago. A writer and photographer spent several days with Aitken taping many hours of conversation and taking a wide assortment of color slides of the chaplain at work at Duke and at his home and vacation cottage.

The film strip was produced primarily for use as an educational and promotional film in Methodist churches, but it was so well received that it is now being used as well for numerous orientation programs across the country for hospital staffs to explain the role of a chaplain.

Sun Shines on Como Team's Tourney Win

Singer Perry Como and his teammates Bill Yancey, Roy Teer and Robert Hickson took advantage of the late spring sunshine last Sunday to capture first place in the second annual Duke Celebrity Golf Tournament with a 16-under par score of 55.

Como, a long-time golfer and friend of pediatrics professor Dr. Jay Arena, was as surprised as anyone.

"In 25 years of playing in events like this, this is the first time I ever won," he said with a broad grin on Sunday afternoon. It wasn't any secret that the star of hundreds of television shows since the 1950's was as pleased as a little boy with his first bicycle.

Astronaut Gene Cernan, the last man to walk on the moon, headed the second place team on Sunday, consisting of Martin Revson, J.D. Williams and Cy Laughter.

But unlike most golf tournaments, winning was not the first thing on the minds of those who participated in the event, and anyone who watched the celebrities and their golfing partners couldn't help but be struck by the difference in atmosphere from that surrounding most tournaments. With all proceeds going toward research sponsored by the Department of Pediatrics, the air was almost carnival.

Comedians like George Kirby and Jack Albertson cracked jokes while lining up putts on the greens. Singers Chet Atkins and Mac Davis bantered with the spectators before "important" shots.

Como and athletes such as Roger Maris, Jeff Mullins and Jack Marin were among those who did double duty, ignoring writer's cramp while signing hundreds of autographs in the hot sun.

WKIX disc jockey Pat Patterson, announcer and master of ceremonies, teased the astronauts over the loudspeaker, asking how they could find their way to the moon when they couldn't even find their way around the Duke Golf Course.

Bob "the Fly" Fleischer, recently graduated Duke basketball standout who has spent many hours entertaining children on the pediatrics wards here, also signed autographs for shy and giggling little girls, who offered pencils and programs.

Shutter-bugs vied for camera angles. Volunteers manned the cold drink stations.

Atkins puffed on a big cigar while putting. Mac Davis wore old Levi's and a UNC T-shirt. Colonel Sanders smiled and explained he didn't even know the rules of golf, let alone how to play.

The breeze picked up spirits, long drives and ladies' skirts.

Funnyman Kirby wanted to know where he could get some catfish stew. It was that kind of day.
