whatever they were doing before surgery, with minor exceptions like contact sports," she said. For instance, ostomates can swim, play tennis, ride horses, ski and have children, whereas 30 years ago, before the surgery was available, people with these illnesses would have died.

The association aims to help people realize as Raynar Isackson, an ostomate who has worked in Central Supply Services for 30 years, said, "What might have been, might have been beautiful, but what is, is beautiful too, because we're all alive."

"Education and support are the primary goals of the association," James said. "The United Ostomy Association has a visitation training program so a person can learn how to visit someone who has had or is going to have an ostomy."

Moral and Technical Help

Worthy added, "The association helps you find out about different appliances and methods for putting them on. You can give each other the moral and technical help you need, and it does all the members a lot of good to feel like they're helping others."

The association is open to ostomates, their families, medical personnel and others interested in helping ostomates. It is co-sponsored by the American Cancer Society and the United Ostomy Association.

In addition to President Worthy, officers are vice president, Dawn Dewar of Dewar's Jewelers; secretary, Marilyn Floyd, RN; and Mary Satterwhite, RN at Durham County General Hospital.

OARS Founder Takes Position With Aging Institute in Denver

Dr. Eric Pfeiffer, professor of psychiatry at the medical center and associate director for programs of the university's Center for the Study of Aging and Human Development, has resigned to accept a position as director of the Davis Institute for the Care and Study of the Aging in Denver, Colo.

The 41-year-old physician, who has been on the Duke faculty since 1966, also will hold the title of professor of psychiatry at the University of Colorado School of Medicine, according to the Davis Institute president, Dr. A. J. Kauvar.

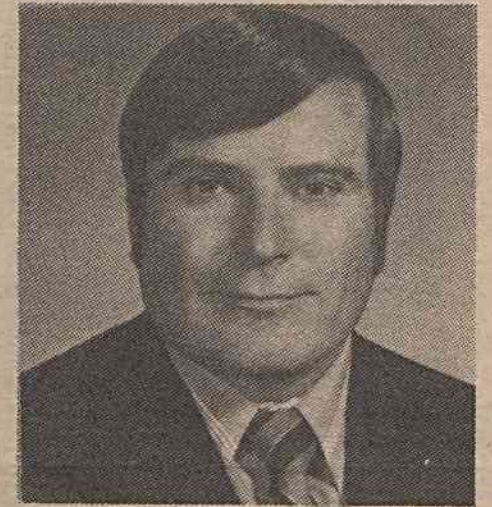

Pfeiffer's task will be to develop the research and treatment facility which was founded last spring after Denver oil man Marvin Davis gave $5 million to establish it.

Since coming to Duke, Pfeiffer has achieved a national reputation for his work on the relationship between mental health and aging.

He founded Duke's Older Americans Resources and Services Division (OARS), an information, counseling and referral service for senior citizens that has become a model for similar programs elsewhere in the country.

Current chairman of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare Committee on Mental Health and Mental Illness of the Elderly, Pfeiffer has served as acting director of the Davis Institute since last July.
