

Graduating Seniors Receive Annual Awards

During the Hippocratic Oath Ceremony and the School of Nursing Recognition Service in Duke Chapel last Saturday, annual awards were presented to graduating seniors in medicine and nursing who had distinguished themselves in service to the community, in scholastics and in research.

Jefferson Award

In the School of Medicine Michael Kevin Magill received the Thomas Jefferson Award, the most prestigious honor bestowed on a student by the medical school. The award is given only when the awards committee believes a student has merited it.

Magill was cited for outstanding service contributions in addition to high academic standards. President of the senior class, he has been student coordinator at the National Advisory Board of the American Medical Student Association of Preventive Medicine. He has been active in the Duke Forum for Primary Care, the Davison Society and the Medical School Sex Education Committee. He helped to establish several new courses.

The Jefferson award consists of a rare book of medical history, a certificate and $100.

Thomas Duncan Sellers Jr. received the Sandoz Award of $100 and a plaque for research on the functional pathophysiology of the Wolff-Parkinson-White syndrome. His papers on the work "will set the standards for the rational basis of pharmacological therapy of these conditions for some time to come," his citation said.

The $100 Trent Prize in the history of medicine went to James Allen Young for his paper on "Anthropometric Study of Human Growth in 19th Century American Medicine."

The Upjohn Award of $200 and a plaque was presented to Roy Jerome Williams, for outstanding contributions in community health service. As past president of the Duke Chapter of the Student National Medical Association he worked with community programs and a series of radio programs involving the health care of diseases prevalent in the black community.

Medical Publication

The Lange Medical Publication Award, consisting of four books, went to Michael Joseph Borowitz and Richard Alan Schatz.

Borowitz was cited for his contributions to the Sex Education Committee, the Committee on the Human Sexuality Medical course and the Edgemont Community Clinic.

Schatz was selected for his outstanding academic performance, for his efforts with the Edgemont Community Clinic, for assisting with the orientation for first and second year students and for assisting with the Student Faculty Shows and other social activities.

Schatz also was recognized for receiving the Davison Scholarship travel award in 1976 for study in England and the Netherlands.

Mosby Award

The C.V. Mosby Award of a certificate and a book was presented to four students:

Linda Alice Bishop was selected for participating in the Davison Society, in the American Medical Student Association and in the student play, for assisting with orientation for first year students and for academic excellence.

Stephen Lee Cochi was named for participation in the primary care newsletter, the yearly primary care conferences and the primary care curriculum study program, as a recipient of the King's Fund College Fellowship, and for serving as class representative and chairman of the Student Scholarship Committee.

Miles Edward Drake Jr. was named for involvement in the student play and for serving as student commencement speaker.

William Elwood Garrett Jr. was cited for serving as president of Alpha Omega Alpha, for organizing the Sexuality Symposium with Masters and Johnson and for academic excellence.

Academic Honors

The American Medical Women's Association achievements citations went to Martha Frances Arthur and Linda Carole Terry for academic excellence.

Eight students were recognized for earning both M.D. and Ph.D. degrees: Robert Marshall Austin, Franklyn Francis Bolander Jr., Michael Joseph Borowitz, Gary Edward Cordingley, Joseph John Eiden Jr., William Elwood Garrett Jr., Arthur Howard Tatum and James Richard Thistlethwaite Jr.

Nursing Honors

In the School of Nursing Recognition Service, four students were honored for graduating with distinction: Susan Ruth Beck, Lauretta Sue Frederick, Elizabeth Ann Whanger and Anne Edgerton Winch.

Frederick and Miriam Kay Jernigan received the Aaronson Award and graduated summa cum laude as the two students enrolled for the whole four years in the nursing school who earned the highest grade point averages.

The Moseley Award, presented to the student who has shown the greatest achievement in nursing, went to Leslie Wood Snedaker.

Students selected for inclusion in Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities were Susan Ruth Beck, Lauretta Sue Frederick, Deborah Susan Peck, Eleanor Gordon Richards, Patricia Ann Rieser, Kim Patrice Spalthoff and Anne Edgerton Winch.
