First Annual Kinney Award Presented to Dr. Sabiston

The chairman of the Department of Surgery is the first recipient of a new teaching award established to honor a former director of medical and allied health education at Duke.

Dr. David C. Sabiston, James B. Duke professor and chairman of surgery, was chosen by the graduating class of the School of Medicine to receive the first annual Kinney Award for teaching excellence.

It is the second such honor for Sabiston this spring. He also was a Golden Apple Award winner, selected by a vote of the entire medical school student body as the outstanding teacher in clinical sciences.

Named for Outstanding Educator

The Kinney Award was established by the Duke medical student government organization, the Davison Society, and named in honor of Dr. Thomas D. Kinney, former chairman of the Department of Pathology and past director of medical and allied health education.

"The award has been named for Dr. Kinney to recognize his years of dedication to the School of Medicine and the educational experience of its students, and as an enduring expression of the student body's appreciation for his devoted service," a Davison Society representative said.

During his more than 40 years as a physician, scientist and educator,

Kinney has gained national recognition for his efforts to improve medical education in the United States.

'Highest Ideals'

He recently became the 24th recipient of the Gold-Headed Cane Award, established in 1919 and given by the American Association of Pathologists to physicians "representing the highest ideals in medicine and pathology."

Kinney stepped down as director of medical and allied health education in 1974 and as chairman of pathology the following year.

The Kinney Award includes a check for $500, made possible by a contribution of matching funds from Paul DiSantis and Associates, the local general agent for Minnesota Mutual Life Insurance.

Sabiston is president of the American Surgical Association, member and past officer of numerous other professional organizations, author or co-author of more than 200 scientific articles in his specialty, editor of a major medical text and co-editor of another.

A native of Onslow County, N.C., he received a B.S. degree from the University of North Carolina in 1943 and an M.D. from The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in 1947.

He joined the Duke faculty as chairman of surgery in 1964.

Student Selected as Luce Scholar

Duke medical student Reginald E. Ishman, 24, has been selected as one of 15 young Americans to spend a year in Asia in the Luce Scholars Program.

Supported by the Henry Luce Foundation of New York, the program is designed to give a greater number of potential American leaders a firsthand familiarity with Asia at a formative time in their careers.

A 1974 graduate of the Stanford University, Ishman spent a year as a graduate fellow at Amherst College before beginning medical school. He will take a year's leave of absence while he works with a community health program in the Philippines.

Ishman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ishman of Portland, Ore., and plans to become an ophthalmologist.

The Luce Scholars represent a wide range of professional backgrounds, including forestry, energy policy, journalism and art. Participants were selected from nominations submitted by 60 colleges and universities around the country. Five winners were named from each of three broad geographic regions.

This fall the scholars will attend a briefing in Princeton, N.J., and an orientation program at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. They will pursue assignments that have been individually tailored for them on the basis of their career interests and preparation.

All Asian aspects of the program are managed by The Asia Foundation, a non-profit, non-governmental organization with an extensive staff of field representatives in the Far East.

The Henry Luce Foundation was founded in 1936 by the late Henry R. Luce, co-founder and editor-in-chief of Time, Inc. Since its establishment, the foundation has made grants totaling $22 million for philanthropic projects in higher education, public affairs, scholarly programs in East Asia and theology.
