Take book before thief takes you

Almost anyone can be a thief.

This statement is the message of a 12-page booklet prepared by the public safety department.

"People who come to work here tend to think Duke is a safe place," according to Capt. A.B. Washington, senior command officer of public safety for the medical center. "But it's not, just about anyone can be a thief."

Washington said the number of incidents of crime are rising at the medical center.

The brief orange booklet, entitled "Crime Doesn't Pay," points out various safety precautions that lots of people know about, but apparently aren't following.

The booklet was designed and illustrated by Washington and Lt. Merle Crittenton. Washington said the mother of public safety director Tim Wheatley helped with the illustrations.

Washington urges victims to report crimes immediately to the public safety department — 684-2444, or 911 for emergencies.

"People should call us promptly when they are victimized," Washington said. "There is little we can do when someone calls us two or three weeks after something is stolen."

Copies of the booklet are on display and available outside of the public safety office, next to the Medical Center Board Room (yellow zone, first floor).
