should be all the greater when that success is won by one who labors without the more fortunate circumstances of his competitors. One of the great magazines is publishing letters from its readers on the subject, "The Noblest Man I Ever knew." In our every-day experiences most of us know of worthy actions, unselfish deeds, inspiring examples, that would bear fruit in the telling. Write us some that you have seen. You need not tell the names and you need not confine yourself to the things usually called great. Examples of fidelity, helpfulness, unselfishness, either among rich or poor, are the things worth publishing.—State Journal.

YOUR MOTHER

She was only a country woman, Just simple and plain, like all Who grow up in a little village Where seldom the great things call. She had toiled and had her struggle, As they did in the days that were— But say, don't you wish your daughter Would turn out a woman like her!

She was limited much in her chances For an education, yes; And it may be even her chances For social advantage were less. Her hands with work were wrinkled, And her traveling was never "fer," But, oh, don't you wish your daughter Would turn out a woman like her!

She spent her young days helping Your father to make his way; And she hadn't much time for fashion With her children to rear, but, say Just look back keenly and careful On that life of such little stir, they wonder you want your daughter those consequences, like her! To remember, to retrace, rehearse in mind again know, own childhood suggests labor have aroused a pain.

There is one lesson which every young person ought to learn. It is a duty which cannot be too strongly urged. It may be expressed in three words: "Wait on yourself." Sunbury, O., March 6.—Jed Perkins went to sleep in the stall with his big bay mule last night. He (Jed) is now doing as well as could be expected.—The American Issue.
