NEW VERSION OF 'FREE-FOR-ALL'

Last Week's Game

Christians Vs. Quakers

By Dwight Mize
Reprinted from the Oct. 3 issue of The Appalachian, Appalachian State University.

It finally happened in America. It even happened in North Carolina. The Quakers and Christians lived peaceably together ever since this great land was created but the "melting pot" finally boiled over.

Where did it happen? It happened at Elon, North Carolina.

When did it happen? It happened Saturday night, September 27.

What happened? Several hundred fans, players, and others were involved in a clash at the Elon-Guilford game last Saturday night. It took several law-enforcement agents over twenty minutes to clear the field of the spectators and players.

How did it happen? Reporters state that the free-for-all started over an incident at the Guilford bench. Elon's Richard McGeorge went after a pass at the sidelines at the Guilford bench and reportedly was hit UNINTENTIONALLY after the play had ended.

The All-American end who is one of the greatest ends in the entire nation unintentionally (of course) pushed Guilford Coach Bob Lord. That was all it took as the Guilford bench emptied at an attempt to get to McGeorge. Elon's bench then emptied and ran to the other side of the field to get in a few punches of their own.

As Elon's bench emptied they were followed by a herd of Elon fans. Guilford fans, not to be outdone, lit out for the field. Somehow, the police got in the midst and broke up the action. Heard in the crowd were screams of "police brutality."

After the tempers were cooled somewhat, a check under the Guilford stands delivered a surprise. Lying peaceably, i.e. cold as a cucumber, was offensive-back Joe Rinaca (he was just taking a nap, said Guilford fans, because he was tired).

Appalachian plays at Elon this Saturday night (Oct. 4). Each Mountaineer fan planning on taking the trip should take along helmets, say certain football enthusiasts.

When You Are Tired of Sitting Just Fidget, Say the Experts

The next time you are uncomfortable in a theater, stadium or auditorium seat—fidget.

That's the advice of seating experts at American Seating Company, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Researchers have found that holding the body virtually motionless tenses and strains the body muscles, restricts circulation, and promotes discomfort and fatigue.

Fidgeting and squirming relaxes those muscles and distributes the strain of supporting the body over a wider area, allowing blood to circulate again through constricted vessels. Even only slight shifts of arm, leg or torso can restore comfort almost immediately.

What Is an Average Man?

The average man is 69.1 inches tall and 161.9 pounds in weight.

In World War I the average adult male stood 67.7 inches tall and weighed 142 pounds. During World War II he was 68.4 inches tall and weighed 155 pounds. Recent studies, according to the American Seating Company of Grand Rapids, Michigan, have shown that on the average sons are 1.3 inches taller and as much as 10 pounds heavier than their fathers at the same age.
