CHEEK BLASTS APATHY

BY CORNEL DAVIS

Calling the apathy of black colleges and "the black middle class" a negative aspect to the Black American revolution, Shaw President, Dr.

James E. Cheek asked for man involvement on their part as he initiated Men's Week at F.S.C. in latter April.

"Black Americans have brought about the greatest social revolution of modern times," the educator said, but he added, "Too many black colleges and "the black middle class" fail to become involved in current events."

He emphasized that not only the white middle class, but the black middle class as well, needs to be awakened.

Dr. Cheek said that last summer and immediately after Dr. Martin Luther King's death will represent the moments when the nation realizes its destiny or when the final curtain began to be lowered on our history.

Resistance to tyranny he said, "is no less noble for the black man than it is for the white man. If the forces that seek to keep us enslaved prevail, then the prospects for this nation are foreboding."

He concluded that life for the black masses is getting worse and steps to redress the balance are long over due.

The rest of Men's Week consisted of a talent-fashion show, symposium panel discussion, a field day, a semiformal dance and a banquet.

On Tuesday, April 30, a fashion-talent show and dramatic satirical skit, "If Men Played Cards As Women Do" by George S. Kaufman, was staged in Seabrook Auditorium. The program began at 8:15.

Wednesday afternoon, May 1, at 4 p.m., a field day was scheduled and featured events on the college athletic field, gymnasium and quadrangle. "The Black Man's Role in Education, Politics and Community Relations" was the theme of a symposium slated for Seabrook Auditorium at 8 p.m. in the same day.

The Choir Room, Rosenthal Building, was the scene of a seminar and discussion group Thursday at 8:15 p.m. Included in the topics for discussion were "Is God Dead", "Dope and Sex On The College Campus", "Maintaining Racial Pride", "Sportsmanship" and "Do You Want To Burn Your Draft Card?"

Fayetteville-Rohm and Haas Company has pledged $3,000 toward a $10,000 college preparatory institute at Fayetteville State College this summer.

College officials are seeking pledges from other Fayetteville area businesses and industries to secure the additional $7,000 needed for the institute.

The institute is designed to serve as a "bridge" or "headstart" program for 50 high school graduates from the Fayetteville-Cumberland area who have been accepted by the college for admission in the fall.

The Institute will seek students whose high school grades rank in graduating class and Scholastic Aptitude Test scores indicate they will experience academic difficulties, and students who should be able to do satisfactory work but desire additional preparation.

The curriculum of the institute will be English, mathematics, and general science.

To measure the effectiveness of the program, a year-long evaluation will be made of the progress of the summer participants in their first year of college work. Sponsoring agencies will receive a copy of the report.

The Institute will bear the cost of instructional supplies, lunch and will provide a transportation stipend.

A director, an instructor in the three areas of study and three student assistants will conduct the institute.

In addition to the momentary pledge, Rohm and Haas Company, has agreed to provide a full time instructor at no cost to the institute and a promise of additional support in future years.
