Dean of students, John C. Jones Active force in Carolina

Mr. John C. Jones, FSU's Dean of Students, has been a key figure in university student guidance since 1959, serving on numerous committees where he has fought for the best interests of FSU.

Mr. Jones is on several state and municipal committees. He is shown above (left) at the time of his appointment to the North Carolina Board of Juvenile Corrections. With him are his wife, Mrs. Alice Jones, his daughter, Miss Yvonne Jones and Superior Court Judge Maurice Braswell, who administered the oath of office on behalf of the Governor.

Mr. Jones is on the Governor's Board for the Study of Children and Youth, the Board of Directors for Cumberland County Red Cross. He is a commissioner for the Boy Scouts of America, vice basilieus of the Beta Chi Chapter of Omega Psi Fraternity and a deacon in the College Heights Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Jones was the first black to work with the North Carolina Rehabilitation Department as a rehabilitation counselor. He has received two commendations for dedicated service to the State of North Carolina.

The affable Dean is a product of North Carolina Central University, where, in his thesis on the Reconstruction Period in North Carolina, he blasted white historians for not painting an accurate picture of blacks in North Carolina.

Mrs. Jones, seen in picture (above right) at her desk, hails from Newark, New Jersey. She has served in the Registrar's Office at North Carolina Central University, as secretary to former President Rudolph Jones and is presently employed in the office of The Registrar

SGA PREXY TELLS CITY CORRECT ITSELF ON TREATMENT OF BLACKS

Student Government Association leader, James

Nesby, told Fayetteville City officials that city government should correct itself on the treatment of Blacks.

Mr. Nesby cited the city's failure to appoint FSU graduate, Arthur Fields, as superintendent of Parks and Recreation solely on the basis of his being black.

The SGA President highlighted the November 15, Fayetteville State University Day program, cautioning the Fayetteville community to stop back-slapping the university as if "all's well; it's a good place."

Students of FSU distributed circulars on which they expressed opposition to Mayor Charles Holt. The Smith case was again cited; the Honeycutt affair was severely criticized and the mayor was accused of nasty, racist ways of handling city council meetings. Students called upon their followers for support:

"Brothers and Sisters, because we are one race working for the same things, we ask for your support in every action we take today in showing Mayor Holt who is really our enemy; that we know why he is here and that we do not intend to consider his unnecessary lip-service."

Mayor Holt was represented by Mayor Protem, Harry F. Shaw.

Principal speaker, Dr. Charles Lyons, referred in general to the FSU curriculum and his philosophy of giving as many students as possible a chance at an education. He asked for city and community support. Lyons talked in very general terms about F.S.U. as a future degree granting graduate center. His ideas were based upon the now circumspet NCSU - FSU joint curricula program.

Other events during "FSU Week" included a visit to the campus by Mr. Donald W. Woods, assistant Director of Summer Fellowships for the National Urban League. Mr. Woods discussed a program designed to provide a business orientation for black faculty and administration.

The Department of Speech and Theater participated in FSU Week by presenting a one-act play, CLARA'S OLE MAN, nightly, November 9-13. The play was directed by Dr. Mel Slott and presented to a select audience.

at FSU.

The Joneses' older daughter, Miss Yvonne Jones, is currently enrolled in Spellman College. At E. E. Smith Senior High School, she served as secretary to

The Black Students Organization, was active in the Fayetteville Youth Council and played several instruments in the school's band for six years.

Another daughter, Donna, age six, is a freshman at the Ferguson Elementary School.

Business faculty at confab

Several members of the faculty of the Department of Business Education and Administration attended the recent meeting of the North Carolina Business Education Association, which convened in Wilmington on November 6-7. The following faculty were in attendance: Dr. Grace Black, Mrs. Daisy Lissley, Mrs. Beulah Monroe, and Miss Carrie Stokes.

The theme of the meeting was "The Fourth Relevance?" Among the notables appearing on the program were the following: Dr. Lawrence Erickson (typewriting authority, University of California at Los Angeles), Dr. Ann Scott Daughtrey (basic business authority, Old Do-

Admission to Teacher Education Cards prerequisite

Dr. Walter T. Pace, Chairman of the Department of Education and Psychology, says that prior to the end of the current semester, December 21, 1970, all students who are eligible for Admission to Teacher Education will be issued official Admission to Teacher Education Cards. They will be required to have these cards in their possession, and to show them to registration officials if they enroll in Professional Education courses during registration periods. These official Admission to Teacher Education Cards, besides carrying the name of the student, will carry the official Seal of the University, and the signature of the Chairman of the Teacher Education Council. It must be understood that students who have not been issued the official Admission to Teacher Education Card will not be allowed to pursue Professional Education courses.

Students who have been admitted to Teacher Education are requested to report to Room 201, Smith Administration Building, for receipt of their official Admission to Teacher Education Cards beginning Monday, November 23 through Monday, December 14, 1970.
