

TELL IT TO MYRTLE

Dear Myrtle;

Yesterday while looking in my roommate's desk drawer for some tape, I saw a letter addressed to her in a very familiar handwriting—my boyfriend's. At first I couldn't believe it. Then temptation overtook me and I read it. I almost collapsed when I discovered that the guy I'm engaged to has spent the night with my roommate. Should I confront them separately or should I get them together and bring it out in the open. I need help soon because my temper has almost reached its peak.

Volcano

Dear Volcano;

Ask your boyfriend about this incident and also your roommate, separately. Just ask your roommate about being with him in a "cool" lady like way. Don't mention the letter to her—just to him. Ask him what really happened and tell him of your disappointment in finding the letter from him. Remember that you are a free woman still and don't let him take you for granted. There are plenty of good men who want to be true.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle:

If a young lady is engaged, should she have a casual date with a friend?

Signed,

Dear ?:

There is nothing wrong with having occasional dates with a close friend. If your fiancee is understanding, he will consider you; nevertheless, don't be "out of place" when your fiancee comes to take you out.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle;

How can a young lady stop loving a young man who has mistreated her?

Mistreated

Dear Mistreated;

The only way to stop loving a guy who has mistreated you is controlled by you only. If he has mistreated you, ask him why and what does he plan to do now. If he wants to see you, lay down the law and control your passionate emotions until he has shown you that he is for real this time.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle:

Last night my boyfriend slapped me and knocked me down because he said I had been cutting out on him. He has never hit me before, Myrtle, and I just don't know what to do. He said that he'd better not see me out with anyone else and if he does, there's no telling what he might do. I haven't been out with anyone else so I don't know what he's talking about. I'm afraid of him. What should I do? I love him.

Scared

Dear Scared:

No man has the authority to go around hitting you unless he is being provoked or is defending himself. If you were not cutting out on him and he doesn't have enough trust in you to believe that, then you should find yourself another love. On the other hand, if you are cutting out on him, then you two should develop some type of understanding.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle:

While I was out-of-town a terrible thing happened to me. I was forced to give in to another man. This thing is on my mind constantly. I can't tell anyone because I already feel like dirt. My boyfriend knows something is bothering me. If I told him what reaction do you think he'd have. I've got to tell someone to get this off my mind. Please help.

Nervous Breakdown

Dear Nervous Breakdown:

The fact that you gave in to another man merely is wrong if you think so. It should remain between you and the guy that you gave-in to. The reason that you feel dirty is that you think that it was wrong, so don't do it again or it might destroy your relationship between you and your boyfriend. If you have to confess to relieve tension, tell him, and if he is openminded, he will still respect you for being truthful. Please make sure and admit to him that it was a mistake.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle,

My problem has to do with my relationship with two young ladies. I am engaged to a young girl in my hometown.

IF YOU HAVE A PROBLEM MYRTLE HAS AN ANSWER

place, because you weren't around for her to be with.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle,

Last week I had a date with a guy I knew who had been admiring me for quite a while. I consistently refused his offers to take me out previously. This particular night I had nothing to do, so I agreed. We went to the movies and afterwards started back to campus (or at least I thought we were going back to campus). Instead, we drove to the Downtowner Motor Inn. I was a little upset, I kept my cool. He checked in and asked me to get out. I did, we went into the room and he began trying to kiss me—and I kept resisting. He told me that I had a sexy body and that he couldn't go another day without making love to me. Well... I went into hysterics. I nervously ran out of the room four stories up. He caught me, apologized, and now when he takes me out he never asks for sex.

What did I do wrong, because I loved it?

signed: Loved it But Resisted

Dear Loved it-But Resisted,

Your first wrong move was allowing him to take you to the Downtowner. Had you been ready to return to your dormitory, you would have asked him to take you back to the dorm. From the way I see it you are not too interested in this young man, but you are continuing to build his confidence by continuing to date him. Beware! You are going to be caught in the same situation again if you continue dating him. He is merely giving you time to recover from the first shock.

While in college, I met a certain girl that I find myself attracted to. I can't stand to be with her too long because I find myself wanting to hold and kiss her. I go to see her quite often. Should I stop seeing her or continue to let nature take its course?

Signed,

Don't Know What to Do

Dear Don't Know What To Do,

Only stop seeing her if this is what you want to do. Tell her of your engagement and see what she wants to do too. She may have another boyfriend too. Make sure that you and the girl that you're engaged to can communicate so that each of you will not be hurt by the action of each other. Do let nature take its course because you cannot control nature. Be truthful to both ladies for that is the key to understanding.

Myrtle

Dear Myrtle,

Last night I saw my girl out with another man. She just looked at me and didn't say a word. Yet, today when I saw her she acted as if nothing had happened. She says she loves me, but I don't believe it anymore.

Signed,
In Love

Dear In love,

Just because you saw your girl out with another man doesn't necessarily mean that she doesn't love your anymore. She probably went out with the man in the first

The In look around campus this semester are 'body shirts and pants. Here you see the long-sleeve body shirt, with dog collar, long, flare-leg pants, accented by a gold belt. The In shoes are suedes in a variety of color combinations.

What wardrobe would be complete without a pair of hot pants? Pictured is the one-piece version. The shoes tie up and the straps can be removed.

For a very smart look we have the midi skirt and embroidered jacket, worn over a white blouse. Wet look both, and sassy velvet hat top this look off.

For evening wear, we have not pants with a maxi top. The maxi top has the low-O neckline. The bag ans shoes are the new wet-glitter look.

Black is truly beautiful, as this outfit expresses it. Off-shoulder dress with turban hat, the Soul look.
