IF YOU HAVE A PROBLEM MYRTLE HAS AN ANSWER

Dear Myrtle,
I'm just too sexy! I'm falling in love with myself. I NEED HELP!!
Signed,
Too much powerful TLC. There's a guy I can recommend. Come by the office. You won't be sorry.

Concerned

time be more selective!!!
Myrtle.

Dear Trying Hard,
Try not getting near him so much and see what happens. You may have to ask him to bug off.
Myrtle

Dear Too Much,
It seems that you need some

Myrtle

Dear Concerned,
Maybe you should have phrased your question "Why are so-called religious. . ." If the men you are dating are really, sincerely religious, I'm sure they wouldn't be so vulgar speaking once they got you alone. Try again but this

Dear Myrtle,
There is this guy I like, but every time I get near him, he asks me to bug off. What am I doing wrong?
Trying Hard

Dear Myrtle,
The repercussions of life are entirely too devastating. Dig?

Letter To The Editor

Canteen Move Is Questioned

Dear Editor:

Today, I asked Mr. Allen, the canteen director, when he would move into his new facilities in the Student Center. He informed me that there was a strong possibility he may not move into the center. The reason is that the canteen facilities are to go to the highest bidder. Mr. Allen submitted a bid but his bid may not be high enough to acquire the facilities.

Students, do you realize the full scope of this injustice being done to Mr. Allen, as well as to us, the student body? Well, here are just a few.

For four long years Mr. Allen managed our canteen and invested all his finances. He worked diligently under the illusion that he had finally found a job that would offer security until he retired. Now he is realizing that all he worked to achieve has been in vain.

Mr. Allen is no longer a young man able to make an easy transition from job to job. He is now a middle aged man, and still the head of a household for which he must provide. He cannot bear the strain economically of losing his business. Personally, I cannot sit idly by and watch the administration push this gentleman aside as one would a discarded tool. He deserves a better deal than this and we, the students, we are the only ones who can see that he gets it.

Mr. Allen represents more to us than just a canteen manager. I say this because on numerous occasions he has extended credit to the students. How many of you remember the "hungry days" of September '71 when meal books ran out and hunger pains ran in. Mr. Allen came through giving small loans to those who requested them and placing names on the book for food and other articles. I wonder how many of you have been recipients of Mr. Allen's generosity. He did this because he knew we needed him. Now he needs us. Let us show that we are not satisfied with the predicament that he is in. Let us show that we do not abandon a friend in need.

Furthermore, we may complain that his prices are high, but who is to say what the "next" manager's prices might be. They may be higher and still not offer the fringe benefits that Mr. Allen offers.

We also speak of the need for black capitalism. Well, we have this type of capitalism exemplified in Mr. Allen. When we are in this age of togetherness and of helping one another, how can we sit back and see a man who has extended employment and aid to other blacks driven out with no redress. Also, we need his example to assure us that we too can corner a share of this capitalistic system. Don't allow them to take away this needed example of black enterprise.

In conclusion, I wish to clarify one key area. Mr. Allen did not request me to write this article. In fact, he is completely unaware of my feelings concerning his plight. I say this because I do not want any type of retribution to befall this gentleman as a result of this article.

I feel that a moral issue must be questioned here. Is it morally right that the school and its students should turn their backs upon Mr. Allen after all he has done for us?

Women, Minorities Employment Opportunities Are Enhanced By New Law Oriented Field

New York, N.Y. - The high cost of legal services may be lowered because of the opening of a school for paralegal training. Paralegal Institute, with offices at 1 Fifth Ave., announces that it will train paraprofessionals (non-lawyers) to work at legally oriented matters under the supervision of lawyers.

Persons from over-crowded or uninteresting fields, and married women desiring to return to work after rearing their children are expected to enter the paralegal program, which lasts for three months.

"A college education is suggested but not required," said Carl E. Person, director of the Institute, "but an equivalent development in communicative skills (reading, writing, speaking, spelling and comprehension) and a high IQ are prerequisites, together with sufficient motivation."

Person, 35, founder of the Institute, is a high school dropout, but a graduate of Harvard Law School. He has been associated with a number of prominent Wall Street law firms, including the one in which Richard Nixon was a partner before becoming president. He is also author of The Save-By-Borrowing Technique, published by Doubleday in 1966.

After receiving the proper training, the legal paraprofessional can perform legal research, analysis and writing, prepare initial drafts of employment or separation agreements, underwriting of merger-acquisition agreements, and assist in the probate and administration of an estate or the setting up and maintaining of a corporation, among other activities. In short, the legal paraprofessional assists the lawyer in assembling and analyzing the information on which the lawyer bases his legal advice and other services, reducing the amount of time he need spend on the matter.

The need for the legal paraprofessional arises from the high cost of hiring and training recent law graduates, with the costs passed on to the lawyer's clients. Graduates of the Institute will be able to command starting salaries of $9,000 or over or their tuition will be refunded, Person said.

Person sees the use of legal paraprofessionals as permitting lawyers to be more productive, while lowering the cost of legal services and increasing the demand for lawyers.

"It will increase employment opportunities in the legal-services industry for women and minority-group members. In addition, there may be a decrease in the need for legal-aid societies and other non-profit legal assistance groups for the poor as a result of the reduction in legal services costs."

The horned toad is really a lizard.
