

Poems by Michele McIver

He must stand tall
For I will look up to him

He must think clearly For I will need his guidance

He must be brave
For I will depend upon him

He must be natural For I can only love what is real

He must demand the best For I am the best

He must be sensitive For I love to touch

He must be tolerant
For I am sometimes hard to understand

He must be honest
For I will trust him and he, me

DO YOU KNOW MY NAME?
IT'S THE SAME AS YOURS

"TO THE STRANGER"

Today you said a kind word for no reason Or did for me that favor that I needed but couldn't (or wouldn't) ask of you

When my friends are kind I appreciate it because I realize that they know my good points
and bad
And nevertheless love me
But you a stranger could only have for a motive the desire to help another person.

For lack of time
in this rushed world,
I couldn't thank you properly
But I will thank the world for you
by spreading that kindness you so generously gave me.
And we'll watch it grow.

Could I open the door to my mind
for you.
So that I could let you know about me.

If you looked in,
and I looked out and we really saw each other
WE COULD LEARN TO LOVE

CONGRATULATIONS

When we achieve,
many times a person
on the outside can't really see where we came from
and where we're going

But each of us in our own moment of Achievement
has the satisfaction of being happy inside

Is tomorrow the future,
or just an extension of today?

Sometimes I'm reading,
And you walk across the page
And the rhythm of your footsteps
is music
And your face is a beacon for a lonely night

And your love feels like the sunset on an autumn day.

Sometimes I sleep
And your presence vibrates

my being And sends dandelions to keep me company
And a song to talk with me.

Sometimes I sit and think And smile at you and me Or look in the mirror and see the wall behind it Or walk in the dark and feel the sunshine.

"THE SUN"

Rises and climbs and after it reaches its Height
There's nowhere for it to go but Down,
But tomorrow it
Rises
Again.

Some days,
we live more than others
And the more living we do, the better we feel as we lie down to Rest and wait for tomorrow

"on life, i mean death"

a seed, a beginning follows the natural course of events,
but how unnatural.

young yet ancient and perhaps timeless.
where there is life there is death.
but what is lost as death becomes
life
or gained as life becomes
death
or understood as men become wise

"man"
caught in the web
of his genius searching for simplicity
but lost
in his own complexity and achieving nothing but greatness

Survey Reveals - - Most Students Planned to Enter Summer School

by Sheryl Alexander

There was an increase in student enrollment for the first session of summer school here at FSU. This survey was taken to determine just how much affect, if any, job scarcity had to do with enrollment figures. These are the answers given by students when questioned as to why they decided to come to summer school.

TIM MARRIOT, (jr.) - I'll graduate sooner by coming to summer school."

ROBERT HENDERSON, (sr.) - I couldn't find a job and that had a lot to do with my decision.

JEAN TEEL, (jr.) - I'll finish sooner, but the lack of jobs had no affect on my decision.

THERESA LUCAS, (soph.) - I only came to summer school to graduate earlier.

CATHY WHITE, (jr.) - Jobs are tight but I planned to come to summer school to finish earlier.

EUGENE LOFTY, (jr.) - I came to get in some extra hours and the economy had very little to do with my decision.

SAM POWELL, (jr.) - I want to finish school, jobs are tight.

REGINALD WHITAKER, (jr.) - I'm not attending summer school this session. I hope I'll be able to attend next session. Job scarcity definitely had an affect on my decision not to come.

CLEOPATRA WASHINGTON (soph.) - I came to get ahead faster.

JOANN MCPHAL, (soph.) - I came to graduate earlier earlier.

EVA CARPENTER, (jr.)

- I came to summer school to graduate earlier, and lack of employment had no affect on my decision.

This survey indicates that the majority of students who enrolled for the first session of summer school at FSU did so in order to complete school in a shorter period of time. The majority questioned said that the fact that there is a scarcity of jobs had no affect on their decision to come to summer school. It is my opinion based on the information given about the scarcity of jobs has, indirectly, influenced the decision of many students who are now attending summer school. These students want to finish school earlier in order to find jobs and practice their skills in a world where competition is becoming keener each day.

... According to VOICE Survey, most students planned to attend summer school ...
