Normal School, 1926; Fayetteville State Teachers College, 1939; Fayetteville State College, 1968; and Fayetteville State University, 1969.

The scope of the University program has been enlarged to cope with new demands.

The curriculum has expanded and prior to 1960, the only major offered was elementary education. The General Assembly revised the charter of the University in 1959 and authorized other curricula to include Secondary Education major. Since this time, numerous non-teaching majors have been added.

FSU is a multi-campus University with its main campus located in Fayetteville, North Carolina, a city of approximately 55,000 inhabitants. According to the 1974 census, Fayetteville, is the third fastest growing metropolitan area in the Southeastern United States. A branch campus is located at nearby Fort Bragg-Pope Air Force Base and additional satellite campuses are located in Greensboro, Clinton and Smithfield, North Carolina.

The campus is located on more than 150 acres with over 29 buildings. A multi-million dollar science building will be erected soon. Additionally, a multi-million dollar classroom building will be completed in July 1976, along with a new dormitory. A new Continuing Education Center was dedicated in April, 1976. Over seventeen buildings are non-residential and over 12 buildings are residential.

Chancellor Lyons has echoed time again that FSU is striving to become a fully service University.

At present, curricula are offered in programs which include (1) the regular four-year program leading to the B.S. and B.A. degrees; (2) two year program leading to the Associate in Arts Degree; (3) The Summer Schools, and (4) Continuing Education and Community Services.

Fayetteville State University was established in 1877 with an appropriation of only two thousand dollars. In 1974 the revenues exceeded 6 million dollars.

Indeed, the 100 year transition has been astounding.
