White-College Blacks Form Organization

"The National Black Think Tank" is the name of a new organization formed by black officials, faculty members and students at white colleges and universities. Establishment of the new organization was announced by Archie L. Buffkins, assistant dean for graduate studies at the University of Maryland, who will serve as chairman of the group's executive planning committee.

Buffkins said the new organization was formed at a meeting held Sept. 24-26 on the University of Maryland's College Park campus attended by more than 500 blacks from 157 predominantly white institutions. Purpose of the organization is "to increase, improve and advance the overall status, quality and presence of blacks at predominantly white institutions of higher education through the establishment, implementation of policies, procedures and practices at the national, regional and local level, with membership carrying two classifications—individual and institutional."

The executive planning committee, to be composed of 13 members, will design a constitution for the organization, refine and codify the recommendations of the "think tank" meeting, review for publication papers that are presented, identify specific problem areas that must be dealt with immediately, and publicize the potential working of the organization.

Vance Hall, Men's Assembly Sponsors Internship Program

Vance Hall, along with the Men's Assembly sponsored the second annual Student Internship Program. The Department of Education, the Counseling Center, and various Student Activities participated in the program. Outstanding superintendents and principals were invited from area schools. There was good participation from the Student Interns and Student Practitioners. The internship program included deep and informal discussions on school philosophies, Student Teachers, guidelines and various handbooks, grooming and dress codes, discipline problems, speech mannerisms, Middle School concepts, preparations of lesson plans and other experiences of student teachers.

Their Superintendents spoke on the importance of job interviews and the type of person wanted in the public school system. Mr. W.R. Hall, Assistant Superintendent, Cumberland County Schools, offered students an opportunity to participate in a Student Volunteer Program which would give the students experience in the public school before entering practice teaching. This program would enable the student to make good contacts and good public relations for the University. Dr. Clarence White, Director of Student Teaching volunteered to coordinate the program along with J.C. Jones, Dean of Students. After evaluating the program, it was felt that there would be more coordination between the Placement Office, the English Department, and the Public School Officials. Additional program activities that were suggested included demonstrations on

FSU Choir Performs

The University Choir, under the direction of Dr. Richard Hadley, has appeared in University and community programs several times during the past month.

The Choir received a standing ovation from the audience at the Cumberland County Democratic Bicentennial Rally for their performance of Rossini's "Inflammatus," featuring Ms. Barbara Ware as soprano soloist. Ms. Ware is a Sophomore music major from Rochester, New York.

The Choir will present a Christmas Concert on the Fayetteville State campus in early December. Students should encourage members of the community as well as members of the F.S.U. student body to attend this special performance by the choir.

Council Office Issues Fair Practices Paper

New Expectations for Fair Practice, calling upon colleges and universities to reassess their existing policies and practices in light of the changing needs and issues by the American Council on Education's Office of Academic Affairs. The author is Elaine H. El-Khawas of the Academic Affairs staff.

In a foreword, Council President Roger W. Heyns urges that institutions undertake a "thorough and conscientious reassessment of current practice" in order to "ensure fair treatment of students." To facilitate review, the paper offers illustrations of good practice in eight areas of institutional activity: publications, admissions, financial assistance, recordkeeping, instructional programs, career counseling, grievance procedures, and student affairs.

Copies of the paper are being sent to all ACE members. In addition, the National Association of College and University Business Officers and the National Association of College and University Business Officers and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators have arranged to distribute copies directly to their members. Single copies of the paper are available upon request to the Office of Academic Affairs, American Council on Education, One Dupont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036.

Gap Between Men's & Women's Faculty Salaries Widening

The gap between salaries of full-time men and women college faculty members is widening, according to a report released Sept. 22 by HEW's National Center for Education Statistics. The report showed that the average salary of men on nine- and ten-month contracts rose 6.7 percent last year, while the average salary for women rose 6.1 percent.

"The dollar gap between men's and women's salaries is now greater than in 1974-75 at all faculty ranks," Marie D. Eldridge, NCES administrator, said.

She added that the discrepancy between men's and women's salary increases was due largely to changes at the instructor level, where men's salaries increased by 8.2 percent, compared to a 7.2 percent gain for women.

The salary data are part of an annual NCES report on college and university faculty composition and pay. The report also showed that the number of women faculty members increased by four percent between 1975-76 and 1974-75. But since the number of men faculty members also increased, the proportion of women on faculties gained only .5 percent—from 23.8 to 24.3 percent. The greatest increase in the number of women was at the instructor level, and the smallest at the rank of professor. In fact, the percentage of women full professors declined slightly, from 9.8 percent in 1974-75 to 9.6 percent in 1975-76.

HEW Increases Allowance To Student Loan Lenders

HEW announced Oct. 6 that it has increased the special allowance to lenders under the Guaranteed Student Loan program to 1 7/8 percent for the quarter ended Sept. 30. The allowance in the previous quarter was 3/4 percent lower. The special allowance is paid to make the loans attractive to banks and other lending institutions. It is in addition to the regular seven percent

"We will continue our efforts to provide lenders with an equitable return on their investment in this vital student aid program," HEW Secretary David Mathews said.
