Alice Sidbury

Her main reason for furthering her education is to set an example for her children. "I would like for my children to look back and see just what I, as their mother, have accomplished in the past year," stated Mrs. Sidbury.

Her hobbies are crocheting, dancing, bowling, singing, cooking and macrame.

Mrs. Sidbury shares the following message with the students of FSU:

"Life is not a get over game. In order to become somebody in life one must put something into our society.

You, as an individual, can not accomplish anything by letting someone give it to you on a silver platter. You must strive and strive hard because you owe yourself something. The world owes you nothing."

Mrs. Sidbury further stated, "Leave the partying for later, get your education and make the best of what you are trying to do or become because you and only you are responsible for the outcome."

That Older Student On Your Left May Be Saving Your College

Colleges have been running scared since discovering the coming decline in college enrollment. But, with predictions of a 20 percent drop in the next decade, they haven't been sitting around, wringing their hands. Instead, they've been preparing for the slump by luring in an entirely new set of students via expanded non-credit adult and continuing education programs.

And it's working. The number of programs available is soaring, enrollment in the programs is increasing, and adult education's new image on many campuses is attracting a wider age group.

In the past eight years, the number of schools with continuing education activities has more than doubled, reports the National Center for Educational Statistics (NCES). The biggest increase, not surprisingly, comes from private two-year colleges. These colleges are thinking in terms of survival, as each year the number of such colleges decreases. Now, 147 private two-year colleges have continuing education program, up 141 percent from 1967. Public two-year schools showed an increase of 134 percent.

Enrollment in those classes is up. NCES recorded a 56 percent jump in registration, with public two-year colleges registering the greatest increase.

Continuing education holds "the great future enrollment growths for colleges and universities," (Continued on Page 7)
