Broncos Blast UDC

By Derrick K. Eddie

After losing two consecutive Homecoming Games, the Broncos of Fayetteville State University won that big game on their Homecoming 1981. Two years ago the Broncos entertained the Rams of Winston-Salem State University and lost 28-14. Last year, after defeating Elizabeth City State University year after year, the Broncos lost to the Vikings, 28-15. The pattern was not repeated this year, as the Broncos sent the University of D.C. back to Washington, D.C. bandaging their bruises, with a score of 14-8.

Reginald Williams was the first to draw blood on a 35-yard run off left tackle for a touchdown with five minutes and fifty-one seconds left to play in the first half. It was Williams' longest run this season and Carl Daniels point made the score 7-0. It was the first time that either school scored a point against the other since the series began last year. Both teams played to a 0-0 stalemate last year in Washington, D.C.'s RFK Stadium.

The half ended wildly as three UDC players were ejected from the game on extremely brutal personal fouls. Head coach Ted Vactor almost called it quits when he took his team off the field but decided that since they made the trip, they might as well play ball.

Not too much happened in the second half, as far as excitement goes, but excitement it was for Kenneth Walker as he dove over from the one yard line to score with seven minutes and twenty-one seconds remaining in the third quarter to culminate a 36-yard drive and to make the score 13-0. Carl Daniels' automatic point after made the score 14-0. The University of D.C. then scored late in the fourth quarter and made three two-point conversions that made the final score 14-8. The UDC-FSU series stands at 1-0-1 in favor of Fayetteville State. Next year, FSU-vs-UDC is in Washington, D.C.

Halftime Shows Are Unabashed

Some college halftime shows at Ivy League football games have dealt with subjects traditionally taboo for a college football game audience.

A few examples of past instances are when Yale's band, 130 strong, lowered their pants before ABC cameras to reveal each member was wearing diapers underneath their uniforms. There was a plot, however since the halftime show theme was rebirth.

Stanford University band members formed a marijuana leaf on the halftime field before a television audience and the Princeton band stood in the formation of the build of the perfect freshman woman.

These flashes of not ready for prime time comedy may have met their end though, at least in the Ivy League. The league has said it will do away with the halftime entertainment if the bands performing do not shape up.

Censorship has now become the order of the day for some Ivey league schools. At Brown and Harvard universities the scripts are reviewed by the athletic director.

The major disadvantage of being an unconventional band is the cool reception received from older alumni who, in many cases, are the people who are prime potential financial donors. There are exceptions to the rule of course. Some supporters like the hilarious antics of the bands.

In question is whether the students in the band will bend to the current wave of censorship on halftime shows. The nature of Ivy League halftimes in the future remains to be seen.
