Alpha Kappa Mu is a general scholarship honor society open to junior and senior men and women in all academic areas. It grew out of an idea conceived by Dr. George W. Gore, Jr., former Dean of Tennessee A&T State College. Representatives from five colleges which already had local scholastic honor societies on their campuses met in November, 1937, to study honorary scholastic societies at the invitation of Dr. Gore. The formation of the society was the outgrowth of this meeting.

Since its inception in 1937, Alpha Kappa Mu has grown in size, scope and in its influence upon the academic excellence of American college and university students. Alpha Kappa Mu will seek and welcome the superior college student with a serious purpose in general fields on all campuses regardless of color, religion or national origin.

Rho Beta Chi Chapter officers are Carolyn M. Johnson, President, John Stone, Vice-President, Bessie Little, Secretary, Jerry Masuda, Treasurer, and Charles Blount, Jr., Parliamentarian.

Speaker for the induction ceremony was Ms. Chris Davidson, also a member of the chapter. Alpha Kappa Mu is active on the FSU campus and is engaged in many community projects and activities. Any student interested in further information about the society can contact Dr. Robert Lemons, Head Division of General Studies and advisor for Alpha Kappa Mu, in Room 234 of the Butler Building.

Boston College Paper Wins Access To Logs

The Boston College student newspaper legally deserves access to campus police logs, but not to the names of any BC students involved in campus incidents, a Massachusetts county judge ruled recently.

The ruling came in a suit filed by the Boston College Heights against the university administration, seeking access to daily police logs. Middlesex County Superior Court Judge Samuel Adams said the state's public information law requires all police departments to make daily logs available to the public, regardless of whether the police force is a state or local government agency. BC officials had argued that its private police department wasn't subject to the state law.

Adams also said, however, that federal privacy laws require the BC police to protect the names of current Boston College students. According to Heights Editor Patrick White, the paper can obtain the names of anyone involved in campus incidents who isn't a BC student.

Adams gave the university 30 days to develop a procedure for releasing daily police information without divulging student names. Duffy indicated such a procedure will be in effect by Jan. 29, White says.

Prior to Adams' ruling, The Heights had received a weekly "Police Blotter" report, listing "all the things that happened on campus that the campus police thought were newsworthy," White says. The newspaper staff suspected some major crimes were not being reported, and after learning from the Massachusetts Uniform Crime Report that three rapes were committed on campus in 1979-80 and not reported to the paper, the staff decided to file suit.

Because the ruling came in a county court, it will have no direct impact on schools outside Middlesex County, says White. Boston University located in a neighboring county, has also filed suit against its administration to gain access to security force logs. "This might have some indirect effect on their case," says White. "If the college had appealed the case and it had gone to a higher court, it would have had statewide implications. We think that's one reason they didn't appeal."
