

Criminal Justice Class Tours Fayetteville Police Department

by Mary Owings

To get a first hand look at a local law enforcement agency, Dr. William Reed's Introduction to Law Enforcement class went to the Fayetteville Police Department March 25th and 27th. The complex, next to the new courthouse, contains all operations of the city's police services.

The students were introduced to officers and civilian personnel who man the various units that comprise the department. From Chief Ronald E. Hansen's office to the housing patrol, identification, evidence, community, and youth services, the students were made aware of the many responsibilities our local force has to perform.

Of particular interest were a magistrate with an alleged offender, a rundown of the evidence room, and a demonstration of the robot Officer Blue. The class was given booklets listing the phone numbers and describing the programs instituted for more effective police protection and community service. They were also issued an invitation to join the department's Ride-Along Program, which allows a citizen to accompany an officer on patrol.

Criminal Justice Students Hit the Road

by Viola Stacey

On Tuesday, March 24, Criminal Justice students explored another exciting aspect of the Criminal Justice system. Faculty members Cheryl Fuller and W. T. Moorefield, along with 22 Criminal Justice majors, visited the North Carolina Criminal Justice Academy (NCCJA) in Salemburg. This thirty-minute drive from

May, 1992
Fayetteville State University turned out to be an unforgettable all-day event for everyone.

All students were able to go through the Firearms Simulator (FATS), which proved to be the most exciting event of the day. In the FATS, students and faculty were put in a "shoot or don't shoot" situation. Everyone had the chance to shoot at least once.

The students visited the Criminal Justice Learning Resource Center library that specializes in Criminal Justice material. All students from FSU are able to check out the material at this library. Those Criminal Justice students who are unable to find research material are encouraged to take a thirty-minute drive to Salemburg to visit the Criminal Justice Learning Resource Center.

The students also received a tour of the Academy's dormitories, driving track, firing range, and cafeteria. The cafeteria served a delicious, all-you-can-eat smorgasbord. The trip was free, except for the $2.83 for lunch.

Students Protest Dorm Assignments

Chancellor Says Protest "Wasn't Necessary"

by Matthew Royal

On Wednesday, April 22, an estimated 75 students protested in front of the FSU Administration Complex regarding proposed changes in dormitory assignments for the Fall '92 semester.

Currently, the five women's dorms on campus --- New Residence, Hood, Harris, Smith, Joyner, and Williams --- contain a mix of freshmen and upperclassmen. According to the proposed assignment plan,

"New Res" would be reserved exclusively for freshmen next semester.

New Res is the only air-conditioned dorm on campus, and it is the only women's dorm where students live in suites, with semi-private bathrooms and kitchen facilities in every suite.

While some of the largest universities give freshmen priority, most universities mix freshmen with upperclassmen when assigning dormitories.

The protestors argued that the current system allows for a smoother transition for freshmen to dormitory life, and that they were not consulted about the proposed change.

According to Chancellor Hackley, a small committee of students made the proposal to bar most upperclassmen from New Res. "This debate wasn't necessary," he said. "We need this directed to other issues."

Monica Ray, president of New Res and business manager-elect of the SGA, says that those living in New Res were not informed of the committee's existence.

Others in New Res see freshmen facing problems associated with New Residence's proximity to Vance Hall, which houses most of FSU's male student athletes. New Residence is also the women's dorm most easily accessible to outsiders via Langdon Street.
