

Letter From The Voice

Dear Readers:

The Voice Student greatly thanks all of you for your continued readership. We have heard and appreciate both your words of kindness and disapproval.

We at The Voice have made the point to improve our quality, while ensuring the content is still relevant to the campus community. It must be stressed and understood that The Voice is a student-run newspaper, with student editors, contributors and photographers. We are all working together to constantly improve and produce the best possible product area. These roles include but are not limited to educating the student body on a variety of topics, promoting our brand, and spending endless hours in production (weekends included).

That said, we love what we do and would appreciate the support, assistance and respect from our student body, rather than criticism when we make errors.

As the main source of student's communication and connection to the campus, the staff of The Voice work under the motto "For Students, By Students." Students are human. We are apt to mistakes, just as all Broncos are.

Our core staff of editors are also full time students who are solely responsible for every word, graphic, photo and advertisement in our publication. We welcome any student, who is capable of hard work and creativity, to contribute. To be a contributor for The Voice one only needs to have a few key skills; to commit to an assignment, submit an assignment by deadline and communicate in a timely manner with the core editors. Stories are assigned or suggested every Monday and are due the Thursday of the same week.

The Voice student newspaper welcomes articles or visual creations from the faculty and staff as well.

So for those who like or do not like what The Voice is doing, our suggestion is to take action! Become a contributor, stop by our office and talk to an editor. The Voice is your VOICE. Speak out and be heard.

Contact us via phone (910) 672-2210 or email at thevoice.fsu@gmail.com. You can also stop by in person at the Rudolph Jones Student Center Room 241.
