

Paranormal Activity 4

By Cimmeon Q. Terry

Prepare to jump out of your seat! Well maybe not a big jump if you have seen the first three installations of the 'Paranormal Activity' saga.

According to BoxOfficeMojo.com, Henry Joost and Ariel Schulman's second go 'round at directing this series has earned them a number one spot in the box office this weekend and over $29 Million in ticket sales.

The story takes place three years after the disappearance of Hunter and Katie, from the previous movie. The plot is centered on Alex who is filming her family, taking particular interest to her 5-year-old adopted brother Wyatt.

During one of Wyatt's soccer game and the camera catches eye of another child. Alex later finds out it's her next door neighbor Robbie, who lives with his mom. Robbie begins to appear more often in the next few days.

One day Alex finds out that Robbie's Mother has fallen ill, and that he's going to be staying with her family for a while. Feeling weird about his stay, Alex has her boyfriend Ben installs cameras around the house. Robbie introduces Wyatt to his "imaginary friend" and tells him of his family before he was adopted.

Every night weird unnatural things are happening around the house and Alex has it all on tape. Eventually Alex knows the danger that her family is in, (especially Wyatt) and tries to save them by showing them the truth. But they are all in denial, until it's too late.

I thought this installment was less satisfying in comparison to past films in the Paranormal Activity series. It seemed like this film was just a continuation of the previous versions. It had usual stunts and thrills, but nothing really new.

Spoiler-Alert: The ending will leave you saying, "Ahhh come on! That's it! I really have to wait 'til the next one comes out to see what happens?"

All in all, I give Paranormal Activity a 6 out of 10. But since it's the Halloween season, I still recommend going to see it for a good time.
