

Secretary "K" Building Mission Impossible

If you're ever in Grand Central Station (that is, the secretary's office in K building) you will undoubtedly notice an impeccably neat, attractive secretary named Mary Saunders typing madly away at her desk, answering the telephone with a bright but soft "Good morning, K building," or running off a "rush job" needed before the hour is up. She could very well be doing all three at once. From 8-4 p.m. Monday through Friday, K building's executive secretary manages, referees and cajoles each day to its close — while she prepares herself for the morrow. Mary's tasks are enumerable — making coffee for the faculty every morning, typing, running off and assembling tests, forms, letters and hand-out sheets, taking messages up and down the stairs, and generally making sure each day in K building glides by as smoothly as possible. With the aid of her office cohort Virginia Whaley and a work study student here and there, somehow the sun sets without crises. But the rush is on at 8 a.m. sharp the next morning. Through it all, Mary keeps a cool head and a ready willingness to help. Students ask her volumes of questions a day and she always responds in the same friendly way, even if it's only the 32nd time that same question has been asked. After seven years at WCC, Mary's used to it.

She came to WCC as an Air Force wife in November of 1965, where she worked part time at first. Eventually she was hired as a full time employee and was transferred from A building to B building and finally to K building (taking time out to have two children—Hope, 8 years old, and Manira, 3.)

One of the most significant observations is the delightful relationship she has with the faculty. In fact, Mary has nothing but praise for the teachers she works with. She says, "I love working here for them. They are all so nice." The teachers, in turn, rank Mary their most valuable teammate.

Sigma Tau Sigma Active Again!

Sigma Tau Sigma has done it again. The brothers aided by Alpha Pi Epsilon, gave a Christmas party for the Special Education students from Eastend Elementary School which was a big success. They are planning another cook-out for the children in the Spring.

January 6, 1972 pledge period began for 14 "rough and ready" pledges. After a long rugged month of pledging, February 3, twelve new Brothers were inducted to make a total membership of thirty-one Brothers. During pledge period the pledges sponsored a car wash. The brothers and pledges also show their terrific school spirit at the home basketball games.

Plans are now being made for other service projects in the Spring. Also coming is the Azalea Festival that everyone is looking forward to.

The Brothers regret that they will lose Bernie Houchins and Gary Dozier this quarter. Their active participation in the fraternity has helped the brothers through many hardships.

ADNS In Action

Associate Degree Nursing Students in their red, white, and blue uniforms have become a familiar site at Wayne Memorial Hospital. It has been stated that they will be remembered for their patriotic attire, if nothing else!

Seriously, slowly and surely the group is gaining the respect of a lot of people. As with all new programs, people are apprehensive until the students have proved their abilities. The Associate Degree Students have spent many hours studying and working since they began the program in the fall. Now their efforts are being rewarded by the feeling of accomplishment they get from doing things right.

The students have worked at Oak Manor rest home, Wayne Memorial Hospital, Obstetricians' private offices, and have visited the Eastern North Carolina Sanatorium.

Alpha Pi Epsilon recently held their initiation in private ceremonies. Eight pledges became sisters. After the induction, the new sisters gave a party at the Pizza Inn celebrating the end of their being dominated by their "big sisters." At the last regular meeting, officers for the next year were elected. They are: President Hazel Broom; Vice President Libby Whitfield; Treasurer Dolly Sutton; Secretary Nancy Taylor; Historian Judy Fulghum; Parliamentarian Serry Walton. The sisters now making plans for services projects and for the Azalea Festival.

Voter REGISTRATION

Several students prepare to register Room on Voter Registration Day, according to their affiliations in the Board

The Right To Vote

With the new age limit for voting in effect, college students are able to play a much more active role in politics. Not only are they able to hold rallies, participate in campaigns, hand out buttons and bumper stickers — all of which are important of course, but the responsibilities of actually putting our governing bodies into office lies partly on their shoulders too. There will be a much greater percentage of eligible people who could vote this year than there has ever been in the past. Please note, I said, "Eligible people who could vote this year"!!!!!! Now think about that for a minute. — We screamed, we yelled, we demonstrated, and generally raised a lot of hell trying to get the eighteen year-old voter rights bill passed! Well, we've got it now so lets do something about it. Having the right to vote, and actually voting are two different things. If you cared enough to fight for the right, please care enough to do something about it!! Get out and register so when the elections come up you will be able to support the things you believe in. Registration will end on April 17, and anyone who hasn't registered by then evidently is not interested in the type of government we have. With residency requirements being lowered to three months for local elections, and the state only requiring one year residence, practically all college students should be eligible to register and vote.

Registration facilities were made available at Wayne Community College this month. Posters were put up long beforehand so the students would be well informed, announcements were made, and the whole thing took place in the student union — despite all of the arrangements, approximately 10 per cent of the student body was all that bothered to register. By looking through the student union from the registration table, you could tell that most people were tied up with much more important things, such as their cup of coffee, their daily joke, their game of cards, and of course their favorite song!!! If by chance you fall in the lagging 90 per cent, I think you should re-evaluate your priorities and beat the deadline. If not, don't be one to complain when the votes have been counted and the results announced — you could have done something to change it!!!!
