Computers continued from p. 1

The budget for Information Systems this fiscal year is $79,000, excluding the newly acquired Prime.

Students have access to 4 computer labs: 2 in the A&M Building used for reading and composition classes, 1 in the Mechanical Studies Building, and 1 in the LC Building.

In addition, students may use 2 computers in the Writing Center.

Whichard predicts even more computer use in the future: "I see the college installing 25-30 more computers yearly."

Whichard said departments giving computers the greatest use are the Business Department for keyboarding, spread sheets, graphics, and word processing; and the Liberal Arts Department for word processing and reading skills.

Other curricula using computers include the Engineering and Mechanical Studies Departments.

Six computers at the airport are used as teaching machines, and the Nursing Department has a multimedia computer on order to assist with instruction.

Work study students serve as monitors in the labs open at hours published in the Information Bulletin each quarter.
