

Transfer reps visit, advise students

Campbell University transfer adviser Mary Blalock, left, shares information with WCC students Clavin Barrett and Erica Paxinos during Blalock's March 15, 2001, visit.

On February 21, 2001, Rhea Purvis, transfer admission coordinator at Barton College in Wilson, visited the Wayne Community College campus to answer any questions students had about transferring to Barton.

Only one student had made an appointment to meet with Purvis, so she used the occasion to recruit from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., setting up in the Atrium and distributing brochures, pamphlets and catalogs.

In the past, Price arranged visits to the 4-year college campuses, but because of limited participation from the students she decided to have a representative from the individual colleges come to WCC.

Sharon Price, WCC's transfer counselor, wanted to stress the importance of students knowing the requirements of a 4-year college and university.

Transfer requirements vary among these schools, and students should take this opportunity to talk with representatives.

She stated, "It is the students' responsibility to take control of their educational process and to make sure they are taking the appropriate classes."

Other representatives who came to discuss transferability for students included those from East Carolina University, University of North Carolina at Wilmington, Mount Olive College, North Carolina Central University, and University North Carolina at Greensboro.

Reenactor visits class

Civil War reenactor Kenneth Holland visited the Humanities 110-02 class in April to discuss authentic Confederate dress, supplies and customs.

Clad in a grey woolen uniform with his infantry tassel on his hat and a pin for "26th NC Company F," Holland served burnt rice coffee, parched corn, and hard tack, biscuits made from flour and water.

Holland's wife Lisa is a member of the class which had viewed the film Glory and discussed race relations then and now.
