Students, faculty, and staff had an opportunity to test their alcohol intelligence quotient on Wednesday, April 4, from 10 to 1 and April 6, from 8 to 11 when representatives from the Wayne County Mental Health Association set up information displays in the Atrium.

Sissy Newell, executive director, Dr. John Fischer, chairman of screening, and Joan Hackmann, a board member, conducted the Alcohol Intelligence Quotient (Alcohol I.Q.) tests and manned the displays.

The purposes of the event were to raise awareness about alcohol abuse and to test participants about their alcohol consumption.

About 102 students and staff participated. Newell said this number constituted "a successful visit" to the college.

These tests not only provide the association with statistics but also allow members to counsel the students about any problems they may encounter because of to alcohol in their lives.

Winkle Lee, feature writer for the Goldsboro News-Argus spoke to journalism students about the basic principles of feature writing.

Lee has donated several books about writing to the journalism staff.
