RICK CARTER AS THE ARCHBISHOP

Play Is A Success

The Drama Department of Wilkes Community College outdid itself with the production of Peter Ustinov's play, "Romanoff and Juliet" Dec. 7-11. The play, a satire on diplomacy, centered on a very small, but strategically located European country. The Russians and Americans both compete to gain the country as an ally. Mr. Dewey Mayes, the director, termed the play "an exercise in frivolity." "There is not a serious moment in it," he added.

Well, maybe there wasn't a serious moment in it, but the players exhibited no lack of seriousness in their attempts to perform well. Ustinov himself could hardly have eclipsed Bill

Moffett in his role as The General. Lori Netzer, too, was near perfect in her portrayal of the woman, who although the wife of a Russian ambassador, still has a touch of the peasant in her. Particularly good also was Monty Hamby in a caricature of the snooping Russian spy. The rest of the obviously talented players were: James Russell, Phil Edwards, Nick Bennett, Dick Sloop, Gregg Caldwell, Kay Greer, Jane Reid, Mary Chappell, Carlton Jones, Jr., and Rick Carter.

Not only the cast, but also the technical staff deserves a word of commendation for the job they did with this production.
