COLLEGE FRIENDSHIP.

In a few weeks and weeks that will truly belie their real length, several hundred seniors will receive diplomas indicating that they have completed their courses in the University. But to most of them graduation will mean far more than the mere leaving behind of four years of college work. It will mean the breaking away from the companionship of many friends, in most cases, breaking away from it foreve:. They will not feel it so keenly now; they will not realize its genuine seriousness until the next year rolls around and they do not return as usual to the old associations. But those who have any sentiment whatever cannot help but feel the change; it will steal over them unconsciously.

There is nothing like friendship. A college is in a manner a little world all its own; in it we have our ideals and our opportunities; we find our friends; we live in a close degree of intimacy with them; we learn their fads and foibles; and sentimenTHE GUILFORDIAN tally, at least, we are a community to ourselves. When we graduate from college we are closing up definitely and finally a certain chapter in our lives. Never again, probably, shall we experience such an absolute change of conditions and environment. We go out and make new friends, but they are not college friends. We may come back for more work, but we are not undergraduates, for when a man graduates from college he can never again be in spirit an undergraduate. He assumed a certain indefinite sometning that is bound to be reflected in his own attitude and in the attitude toward him of his former college associates. He is no longer one of the boys; he has joined the many other delegations ahead of him to help form that general body known as alumni; and he individually, whether old or young, will have a certain sense of dignity thrust upon him, and will be shown some degree of the deference paid to the body of "old grads" in general. No, it is of no use trying to avoid it; you, seniors, are about to see a break in that indefinite something which you feel and can't describe. and which you will feel more strongly in the future-college friendship. If you have made the best of your course, you will realize this and it will have a great meaning to you. It you cannot realize it; if to you college has been nothing but books and lectures and drafting tables and test tubes and ammeters and machine designs; if you have failed to find its sentiments and its associations, then you have not seen a vital part of its real meaning, you have missed one of the very best parts of your college course .--- The Daily Illini.

THE "VIRGINIANS" ENTERTAIN.

Miss Ellen Raiford Honored by a Luncheon,

Room No. 10 in New Garden Hall on the evening of the 21st was the scene of a birthday party. The room was artistically decorated in apple blossoms, and trailing arbutus very representative of the spring time set son. The guests arrived at 8:30. each one carrying a peculiarly wrapped package. These were taken at the door by Miss Mary Lou Raiford, who with the other hostesses, Misses Okie Raiford, Lula Raiford and Thelma Cloud, after a hearty welcome handed each guest a package. For two minutes there was a continual exchange of these packages. At the end of the two minutes each girl acquainted herself with the contents of the package which she happened to have, and curious sights were revealed.

The guests then were seated and each one being supplied with paper and pencil, the game "Consequences" was played. This game furnished lots of amusement, revealing the future of the guests, whom they should marry what the world said and the consequences. Then a delicious three course luncheon consisting of olive sandwiches, deviled eggs, pickles, fruit salad, cake and coffee, was served to Misses E. Raiford, Dix, Clodfelter and Coltrane. Toasts were given between courses.

When 9:30 came the guests departed declaring "The Little Virginians" to be charming and delightful hostesses. C. E. DISCUSSES THE REMEDY FOR INTEMPERANCE

On last Sunday night the Christian Endeavor was led by Berry Lee White, the subject of the meeting "Remedies for Intemperance." was The leader began his remarks by saying "that the objective motive is the great propeller of a successful life. Then he told us how enthusiastic the delegates to the Christian Endeavor Convention at Atlanta were to have a saloonless nation by 1920 and how we should do our bit to help bring about this great event. He made the appeal that all Christian Endeavorers should enlist in this great army of men and women who are fighting the battle against king alcohol. The leader gave a very vivid picture of a gin mill with a large hopper; into it intelligent young men were being poured and coming out beggars and outcasts.

Other persons made interesting talks on the subject showing not only the effects of alcohol but of tobacco and other kinds of intemperance. One speaking of remedies gave these two: First give our financial means to help rid this nation of this curse, secondly, use our influence thru whatever channel we can.

Mr. E. D. Peckham, of Brooklyn, who is visiting the college, gave us a few remarks which were very interesting. He said, "to bring about this great victory we all so much desire make the ideals of our nation higher. "Bind ourselves together with cables of influence." "Begin to develop a clean character early in life and be able to overcome the temptation of the liquor habit, which is sapping the life from the young manhood of our country. To do this we must believe, obey, not be careless, and behave." He closed his remarks by saying that we should put on our spiritual gas masks.

NEW CATALOGUE

IN PREPARATION The college office has been hard at work during the last week on the new catalogue and the subject matter will soon be ready for the printer. Several changes are being made and some material added which has not appeared in previous catalogues wo new departments. Household Arts and Education are outlined. A number of new courses also appear in the other departments. A course of study has been outlined leading to the degree of B. S. in which Household Arts is the specialty. The Physics, Biology and Chemistry departments all offer courses which appear in the Household Arts course and which deal with the applications of the sciences to the problems of the household. A new course in the Preparatory School is being offered by the Biology Department.
