Among the new features at Guilford which the isolation caused by the quarantine may or may not have innovated, comes the vespers service on Sunday evening immediately after supper. This is a pleasing feature of the day and worthy of commendation and support. Sundays are sometimes rather long and depressing under present conditions and a service of this kind is the very thing necessary to raise the spirits of the despondent and put one in shape for the work of the following week. It brings the entire student body together, which makes it specially worthy of appreciation. Spirits cannot continue to droop if one attends these services and enters heartily into the singing. The depression vanishes with the songs. The students seem to feel the influence of this sort of thing and so far have entered heartily into it. After a service they feel rested and the monotony of the day has quite vanished from their minds. Then it is fitting that the day should close thus, in songs of thanksgiving. More events like this would be a welcome addition to the life on this campus. Any new features which give wholesome variety to life here would be especially valuable just now.

WEBSTERIANS DISCUSS MILITARY TRAINING

At the regular meeting on Friday evening, Nov. 15, the Webs showed much "pep" in debating the question Resolved, "That the Government of the United States should adopt a policy requiring one year of military training of all able-bodied men before they are twenty-one years of age."

The affirmative speakers, Herman Raiford and Raymond Stafford, were victorious in their argument, by proving the following points: First, patriotism demands military training; second, military training introduces a spirit of team work and cooperation; third, military training produces moral excellence, and fourth, military training brings forth precision.

John Dorsett and Frank Woody strongly defended the negative by proving first, that military training is not necessary for national defense, second that it is not in harmony with the true principles of democracy, and third that military training destroys patriotism in youth.

After the debate, C. M. Macon kept his audience laughing by reciting a humorous selection.

Sundean and Trotter were gladly received as full members of the Websterian Literary Society. Earl McFarland gave an interesting and instructive critic's report, after which society adjourned.

What is the latest? Guilford under quarantine again!

David J. White from Greensboro was a visitor Sunday afternoon.

J. Benbow Jones, '18, has been at the college the past week end.

In chapel last Sunday morning, Miss Gifford discussed in an interesting manner the application of Jesus' teachings to modern conditions, particularly as regards war and social reform.

We are glad to welcome Garland Jonas back to the college after an absence of a year or so. He will be quite an addition to the basket ball varsity.

From the appearance of things at meal times it seems that another table would be a welcome addition.

Potatoes—potatoes! They come in a never-ending stream. It is said Mr. Farlow raised 300 bushels of spuds. Hurry up everybody! Let's eat them up so we can have a change of diet.

The feminist movement has surely struck Guilford hard. This is the day when women are doing men's work but who would have supposed that the girls would have taken over the three activities formerly considered purely masculine prerogatives. Within the short space of Friday and Saturday of last week we witnessed a feminine minstrel show at Memorial, a girl's baseball game on Hobbs field and a girls' serenade in the darkness before Cox Hall. Verily the world moves. Who would have it otherwise. Some day the older girls may receive as much freedom as mature young ladies of this day and generation are entitled to.

A student who suffered from "flu" Had swallowed a pitcher of stew.
It made his friends glad
But Miss Benbow was sad,
For the pitcher was perfectly new.
