

SOCIETY NOTES

WEBSTERIAN NOTES

In the absence of the president, vice president Lamont L. Edgerton called the meeting to order, and appointed J. W. Frazier as critic for the evening. In the debate: Resolved, that the policy of cooperative marketing should prevail in America: Macon and Medlin, the speakers for the affirmative, won the decision of the judges. Macon, the first affirmative speaker, was perhaps the most effective of all. In his speech he showed that the farmer has always been oppressed by the other classes of society and until farmers combine, they will be oppressed.

Medlin also made a good speech. One of his main arguments was that cooperative marketing would free the farmers from the clutches of the middlemen and speculators.

The speakers for the negative, Warrick and Payne made good speeches, although they made statements, which the affirmative speakers disproved in rebuttal. Some of their arguments were: that the farmer had to have money for his crops at the end of the year, that he could not wait until a co-operative marketing organization could dispose of the crops, that cooperative marketing would injure tobacco growers, truck farmers, and other classes of farmers.

The second number of the program was a prophecy by Fred C. Winn. This was highly humorous and greatly appreciated by all.

The third number was a solo by W. L. Rudd. The audience enjoyed his rendition of Annie Laurie. Then he played "Nellie Gray" on the harmonica.

Miscellaneous business was next in order. It was decided by a unanimous vote that the new constitution of the Guilfordian Board should be adopted. It was also decided by a unanimous vote that the design of the Websterian improvement medal should be changed.

After a short summary of the meeting by Frazier, the society adjourned.

ZATASIAN NOTES

The preparatory students in the Zatasian Society had charge of the program on Friday evening, May 12. Their excellent portrayal of southern life and literature made it one of the best programs of the year.

The first number was "Southern Melodies" by Viola Tuttle. The next was a reading in negro dialect by Sara McMahan entitled "The Party." This was an amusing story of negro life in the south.

For the third number Beulah Allen read poems representative of southern writers from four states. From North Carolina she gave "The Lightwood Fire" by John Henry Boner and "Away Down Home" by John Charles McGill; from Virginia, "The Sword of Robert E. Lee" by Abram Joseph Ryan; from Georgia "Song of the Chattahoochee" by Sydney Lanier; from South Carolina "The Land of the South" by Alexander Beauford Meek.

"Black Pepper" by Winnie Mae Rowland was the next number on the program, while for the last number the society sang "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny."

Under miscellaneous business the new constitution of the Guilfordian Board was unanimously accepted and a committee appointed to nominate the Zatasian representatives to this Board for next year.

PHILOMATHEAN NOTES

President Esther White called the Philomatheans to order at the regular meeting last Friday night and appointed Edna Raiford as critic. The program was on "Improvement."

The first number was a good talk on "Improvements for our Daily Happiness" which contained a number of practical suggestions, and was given by Bettie Hall, Vera Farlow and Ruth Pearson for the affirmative, and Henrietta Lassiter and Ruth Reynolds for the negative were participants in the debate, "Resolved that Guilford College should have a May Day fete every four years." The subject was discussed from all possible angles, but the affirmative succeeded in winning the decision of the judges, Elizabeth Yates, Helen Bostick and Ethel Watkins. Ruth Ragsdale played a piano solo, which was followed by "Other Improvements" in the form of some spicy jokes.

The Guilfordian constitution was voted upon and was unanimously passed by the society. The critic gave an excellent report which was followed by some general criticism.

HENRY CLAY NOTES

The Henry Clays gave one of the best programs for the year on Friday night, May 12.

The Society devoted much discussion to the proposed constitution for the Guilfordian Board which continued until its final adoption.

The program given was as follows: I. Debate: Resolved, that the United States should have participated in the Genoa Conference.

II. Jokes.
III. Vocal Solo.
Brown and Shaver presented some splendid argument for the affirmative, which won the decision of the judges.

Reynolds and D. Hodgins, however, succeeded in refuting some of the argument of the affirmative, but they were not able to establish sufficient reasons for the attitude that our country has taken toward the Conference.

James Joyce gave a good selection of jokes which were indeed very humorous.

C. C. Sim, after explaining the meaning of a song, sang it in his native tongue. The number was very impressive and well given.

R. K. Farlow, as critic, reviewed the program, making several sharp criticisms and offering many good suggestions in regard to society work.

CAMPUS NOTES
