

HEART PARTY

Miss Edith Trivette was hostess to a group of students at a "Heart Party" on Saturday evening, February 14.

Heart-shaped sandwiches, cakes, and coffee were served to the following guests: Mary E. Pittman, Imogene Strickland, Grace Hassell, Doris Sapp, Dot Wolff, Frances Carter, Eleanor Grimsley, Ava Roberts, Francis Murchison, Jimmie Bunn, "Brick" Gouger, L. Beamon, Horace Rasley, Sonny Williams, Massey Tonge, Bob Jamieson, and Glenn Robertson.

MISS BRUCE HOSTESS

Miss Edith Thomas and Miss Susie Burson were guests at a tea given by Miss Bruce. Miss Thomas is one of the National Supervisors of Home Economics and Miss Burson is the North Carolina State Supervisor.

PHIL NOTES

Although the girls of our campus do not enter into debating as an outside activity very often, certain members of the Philomathean Literary Society proved themselves quite capable even in an impromptu program, on Friday evening, February 13.

The query "Resolved that boys and girls should not date on clean-up day" was upheld on the affirmative by Katie Stukey and on the negative by Lenona Guthrie.

Essie Brown and Mildred Conrad sang "Hail Dear Old Guilford" for a duet. This was followed by a negro sermon very impressively delivered by Ethel Swaim.

The crowning event of the evening was a charming talk very enthusiastically delivered by Pearle Kimrey on "Romance in Money."

ZATASIANS

As the Philmatheans were using the Zatasian Society Hall for the reception, the Zatasian Literary Society held its regular meeting in Men's Center, Friday night, February 20, 1931.

The program was in keeping with the approaching birthday of a man we all honor and respect—George Washington.

Ada Clinard gave some very interesting facts concerning the life of our first president.

Eleanor Grimsley, Gladys McBane and Edith Trivette sang as a trio our national hymn, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Martha Custis Washington was probably as well loved as her noted husband, and Sarah Jarrett told of her life, stating the most important features.

A dialogue concerning the story of the cherry tree, between George Washington and his mother, was given by Dorothy Wolff, as the mother, and Lucy Edwards, as little George.

WEB NOTES

On last Friday night the Websterian Literary Society held its first formal meeting since their disbandment two years ago.

Temporary President Robertson took charge during the start of the meeting. Officers for the rest of the year were elected as follows:

President, Irv. Davis; Vice-President, William Alley; Sec. and Treasurer, Frank Allen; Marshall, Leroy Miller.

New members taken into the society are: David Lutz, L. Miller, M. H. Barney, R. Monroe, M. Lynn, B. Peacock, L. Rosenfelt, and L. Abel.

Each of the new members expressed his pleasures at having waited and joined the Webs. The society was then addressed for several minutes by Mr. Wendell Cude and coach Robert Dood, both old members of the society.

Plans were then made for staging a complete comeback of the society. Committees were named. Entertainment was discussed. Receptions were enthusiastically voted for. Every one present was pleased with the outlook. There is no doubt in their minds that the Webs will soon be back as one of the leading organizations on the campus as it was in days of yore.

Judge Hayes Gives Talk On Crime

Judge Hayes, of Greensboro, addressed the second meeting of the class on national problems in the School of Missions on last Sunday evening. He developed his discussion around the problem of crime prevention and gave three features as the solution—home influence, education, and social adjustment.

Judge Hayes declared that a child taught in the home to respect responsibility would be worthy of law-abiding citizenship. In educational statistics it is shown that the crime rate decreases with the increase of education. The social problems of today should be to provide the indi-

Ralto Farlowe and the freshmen upheld by Leroy Miller and William Copeland. Again the question was "Free Trade."

The coming engagements with Lenoir-Rhyne, High Point, Appalachian, and Elon indicated that a great amount of work remains to be accomplished. The first debates of the season are the annual Triangular with Lenoir-Rhyne and High Point, Lenoir-Rhyne's negative team debating our affirmative here, and our negative team debating High Point's affirmative there. Tentative teams have been chosen as follows: Ralto Farlowe and Wade Mackie, affirmative with Copeland or Weston as an alternate. The negative team being composed of Wilbert Braxton and Edward Blair, with Miller as an alternate.

A great amount of credit is due to Dean Milner, Dr. McCracken, and Dr. Perisho for the revival of inter-class debates which have functioned successfully in the past and should prove a stimulus for debating in the future.

COUNCIL REINSTATES INTER-CLASS DEBATES

Dr. Perisho, McCracken, and Dean Milner Work To Raise Interest

STUDENT REACTION POOR

Guilford's debating stock took a decided rise recently when the hopes and aspirations of the Debating Council were realized. For a long while we have anxiously awaited the revival of interclass debates—a time-honored custom on the campus. Not only for its benefit to the Inter-Collegiate debating team, but also it tends to influence class spirit which is in demand at a great many schools.

On February 2, the junior class representatives partially divided discussed the inter-collegiate question of "Free Trade." Those speaking were Wade Mackie and Allen White, who upheld the affirmative, and opposed by Wilbert Braxton and Edward Blair of the negative. The discussion proved to be a splendid one and it was hotly contested. Another verbal conflict occurred on the following Wednesday night, when the freshmen accepted a challenge from the sophomores. The sophomores upheld Free Trade and won by a scant margin. Those speaking for the sophomores were: Albert Weston and
