

PROPOSED BUDGET FOR NEXT YEAR PASSED BY BOARD

Students Will Be Given Chance
To Accept Or Reject Budget
In Chapel Monday.

SEVERAL CHANGES MADE

Has Received Official Endorsement of Representatives of Each Student Organization.

After definite assurance had been given to one of the members of the senior class that "the appropriations to the junior and sophomore classes will be used on the entertainment of freshmen and seniors," the Budget Committee of the Student Affairs Board in a meeting last Tuesday night decided unanimously in favor of the proposed budget for 1939-40 as listed on the back page of today's Guilfordian. Concensus of Budget Committee opinion seemed to be summed up as: "If they don't fuss about it, it's okay."

It was pointed out that although the Women's Student Government organization has been denied its request for thirty dollars, the group will, if the students accept the budget, receive more than twice the amount asked because of a provision to the effect that its accumulated unspent balance be made available to it for use in the coming year. This provision, if favorably passed upon by the student body, will enable the Women's Student Government and eight other organizations to have access to previously unused funds totaling $393.35.

The additional allotment to the "Quaker" and the recommendation for special dispensation of funds to the Dramatic Council and the Women's Athletic Association were approved without comment at the called meeting of the Student Affairs Board.

DR. HORNELL HART

Sociological Field Plowed For Budding Aspirants

By JAMES PARKER

His grey eyes jabbing into the landscape with almost bird-like deftness, Dr. Hornell Hart of Duke University repeated: "There are a great many sociologists who are merely social philosophers. The use for them is decreasing."

Earlier Dr. Hart told his interviewer that the towering ingredient in the making of a modern sociologist is "an intense interest in human relations plus an appetite for facts." According to the distinguished leader of Guilford's Spiritual Emphasis Week the future sociologist must cultivate a sound study of social phenomena through such methods as case studies and scientifically gathered statistics. He must be practical, objective.

"There is a need to study primitive societies and other cultures—other people. It saves us from being too provincial," Sociologist Hart clipped in his steady voice.

Of the two theories concerning the place of social science in the present world set-up Dr. Hart takes the view that it should not center upon abstract forms in the human relationship but should broaden into a wide sociological interest in the practical social forms. Practical problems, according to this leader, sharpen up halting methods and aid in providing possible solutions to the questions involved.

In the maze of modern youth the most often encountered questions demanding solution are four: courtship and marriage; the relation of youth to the older generation (of young people to their parents); the economic pressure of finding a job; and the eternal question, "What's life all about?"

Making sweeping statements is not a habit of this writer and lecturer, but there are, Dr. Hart believes, answers to all of these imposing queries. These answers, however, are not patent; they can only be worked out progressively. Looming above all other approaches in importance is the facing of reality. You here candidly and honestly work

Currently on display in the student parlors in Founder's Hall is a collection of 90 original etchings, woodcuts, and lithographs, including prints of such famous artists as Rockwell Kent, Reginald Marsh, and Prentiss Taylor. This exhibition, sponsored by the American Artists Group, is the second of its type which has been brought to the campus through the efforts of Mrs. Milner, and demonstrates the growing movement to provide the average man with original prints of the foremost artists of the day.

The collection includes some color prints besides the dominant black and white, and is being shown at other schools throughout the country.

GEORGE M. COHAN'S "THE TAVERN" IS CHOSEN BY GROUP

Try-Outs for Parts to Be Held Next Monday Night for Mystery Comedy.

FOURTEEN PARTS OPEN

Melodramatic Comedy Wins Acclaim
Over Blood-Curdling "Dracula"
First Suggested.

In a recent session the Dramatic Council chose George M. Cohan's melodramatic classic, "The Tavern," for its annual spring production scheduled for Saturday night, March 18. Try-outs for the Simon-Legree epic will be held Monday night, February 13, at 7:30, decreed the council, which urged that all and sundry report then to exhibit such talents as they possess. Director R. K. Marshall said that there were 14 speaking parts, nine of which are majors.

The blood-curdling "Dracula" was rejected by the council in favor of the Cohan comedy, which has been in successful revival almost continuously, by both professional and amateur groups, since its Broadway stage success in 1920. This heavy comedy of villains, heroes, mystery, screams, pistols, last-minute rescues, and all that melodramas imply, will be a new type of play on the Guilford stage since Director Marshall's advent here two years ago, President T. Taylor pointed out to the Guilfordian reporter.

Bulletin!

Social consciousness reared its blushing head Thursday night as fifty celibate Guilfordians did an abrupt about-face and decided to "Do Something About It." Already in a rut from Pleasant's acquired betrothals and fired to a fever pitch by Y Cabinet propaganda, an overflow mob at the Student Hut churned the usually placid social whirl into foam with the appointment of a Sadie Hawkins Week committee, an Outdoor Entertainment Committee, a Day Student Entertainment Committee, and a Present Dancing Situation Committee. If the demand is sufficient the Guilfordian will publish a "L'il Abner Handbook of Escapes" for the benefit of bashful males.
