"Once we accept a student on the program, we guarantee placement in one of this job choices," states Ms. Leith; "although placement can be made through May, early application will obviously get the pick of the jobs. "Salaried of volunteer jobs are in hotels, offices, archaeological digs, agricultural camps, family homes and other categories. Room and board are available in all cases.

"The program has been going strong," points out Ms. Leith, "and we feel that it is an ideal experience for serious, adventurous students who want to meet people of other countries and see the real Europe." Psychotherapy Aids Vietnam Vets

Seattle, Washington. (CPS) — The Washington state chapter of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War (VVAW) has begun a program to deal with the psychological problems of returning and returned veterans because of a predominant feeling among many Vietnam veterans that the "Veterans Administration (VA) cannot be trusted."

Many Vietnam veterans are turning away from the VA, the government-sponsored agency which was established to alleviate their problems.

There are at present 316,514 Vietnam veterans receiving disability pensions from the VA, less than one quarter of the total 2,185,000 eligible for VA pensions.

The VVAW program proposes the establishment of an agency, comprised of veterans, which deals with the "post-Vietnam syndrome" and which uses relatively new psycho-therapy known as "human social functioning."

Ken Perry, one of the prime motivators of the Washington program, said the easiest way to describe the post-Vietnam syndrome is as a flashback reaction, like the one depicted in Slaughterhouse Five. Perry, who has treated 12 Vietnam veterans in the past year, said one common symptom was that they each had, in some way, "become unstuck in time."

Paul Richards, VVAW coordinator of the project, said the psychological problems created by the Vietnam war have all been ignored by the VA. He maintains that anybody who was in Southeast Asia should have psychological help readily available.

Vietnam veterans, he noted, have the highest suicide and divorce rates in the country.

"It's strange," he said. "Vets live through the war and they figure they've made it, but they don't understand why they can't relate to their children when they get home."

Perry, a former Washington state social worker, has been using the human social functioning method for about five years, and claims that it is the only method of self-analysis that is "worth a damn." The method consists primarily of an initial test, then a series of taped interviews which enable the patient to criticize his own thought processes.

Perry described one of the veterans he treated. The man was a schizophrenic who had spent two years as a war photographer for the U.S. Army.

"For two years this guy turned his back to the enemy and photographed his buddies getting blown apart," Perry said. "At the end of that time he turned his film over to his superiors, and they asked him where the pictures of the dead enemy were, and burned his film. What do you think that did to him?"

Perry treated the vet for six months using the human social functioning method, but instead of tape recorders he used video equipment.

"When he came to me, Perry said, "he was a wreck. Six months later he was talking about where he was at, not where the government of the world was at, and that's the point.

President Deals Blow To Recycling

Despite the warnings of a key report which says that federal involvement is absolutely necessary if the U.S. is to solve its burgeoning solid waste problems, the Nixon Administration has dealt a serious setback to the nation's recycling efforts.

The Administration's fiscal 1974 budget cuts approximately $24 million out of a request for at least $30 million for the Environmental Protection Agency's Office of Solid Waste Management Programs. Included in the cuts were most of the contents of a proposed legislative package of subsidies designed to enhance the nations markets for recycled materials.

In explaining the drastic cuts, William D. Ruckelshaus, EPA head, said that the decision reflected a "reorientation" of the nation's solid waste program. The Administration has concluded that solid waste management is largely a state and local responsibility, he said. Several observers noted that the policy was not in line with previous Ruckelshaus statements on the federal role in waste policy.

The Nixon cuts ignored the recommendations of an ambitious draft EPA report which dealt with ways to solve the country's rapidly-growing solid waste problems. The report never emerged from the President's Office of Management and Budget.

Deceptive Auto Sales Practices Stopped

A suit alleging unfair and deceptive sales practices by employees of a Raleigh automobile dealership was terminated by Attorney General Robert Morgan this month when the defendant's agreed to comply with the terms of the suit.

Defendants in the case were Wiygul-Sanders Ford, Inc., the corporation's general manager, its new car and used car sales managers, two finance managers and four salesmen.

The complaint, filed by Don Davis, staff attorney in the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division, alleged three deceptive trade practices involving car sale techniques and financing.

The complaint alleged that contract forms referred to as "One Shot Contracts" were said to be represented as temporary and not committing the prospective buyer to purchase. The suit, however, alleged that these "One Shot Contracts" were later "used by the defendants for the purpose of coercing prospective customers to purchase vehicles" and, further, that the defendants implied that the contracts, once signed, had "created a legally binding obligation upon the customer to accept the vehicle."

Safeguards against these alleged deceptive practices are:

1. Never sign a contract until it has been read and understood. If a condition of the contract is not clear, ask the salesman or finance manager for an explanation.
2. If a salesman is pressuring you, protest. Tell him you will not be forced into a hasty decision.
3. Do not be coerced into assuming more loan obligations than your budget can stand.

4. Question additions to the advertised price or quoted sales price. Then, do not settle for a vague reply.
5. When making plans to buy a car, decide what type you want and what price you are willing -- or can afford -- to pay.
6. Shop around -- for good cars, good prices, and good loan terms.
7. If you think you have been a victim of deceptive sales and financing practices by a company's management, your Better Business Bureau or similar local agencies and the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division.
