Sebo Running for State Senate

by Patricia Collins

Kathy Sebo, a professor in the Guilford Political Science department, is, as most of the campus is probably aware, running as a Democratic candidate for the North Carolina State Senate. In an interview Monday, she explained some facets of the election procedure in the Guilford County political district and outlined some of her major areas of concern.

tions is $3,000; she thinks that this is too high and that there is a need for limits on the total amount of spending. She also stated that public funds should be used to support candidates running for state offices.

committed to opening up new opportunities for ethnic and racial minorities and providing better access to the courts through speedy trials and a statewide program of public defenders.

At present, there is no restriction on legislators' participation in voting and lobbying in cases which may involve conflict with their own personal financial interests. This could be stopped by the creation of a statewide ethics review board. Legislators would be required to list all sources of income of over $1,000 and would be expected not to participate in areas in which there is a conflict of interest.

Health care in North Carolina is, according to Sebo, "unevenly distributed, inadequate, and expensive." There is a need for improved facilities, increased assistance for those who can't afford health care, and special programs for those with genetic defects a particular concern of Sebo's, as she is active in the Triad Sickle Cell Anemia Foundation.

Sebo stated that the removal of the sales tax on food should be an "urgent priority for" the State Senate. She also favors a tax freeze for all elderly people with a fixed income. Since North Carolina has been operating with a surplus, these reforms could be achieved by re-allocating funds rather than increasing taxation in other areas.

In the area of environmental protection, Sebo sees a need for increased park facilities to open recreational activities to the entire population, more effective land-use planning, and the creation of a statewide mass transit system to ease the burden on the energy supply. She is also feels that the animal population must be regulated in order to protect endangered species and control the pet "population explosion."

Another major concern is the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment, which was not ratified by the State Senate last year. The best way to get the ERA passed is, Sebo feels, the election of more woman senators. She is also

by David F. Dickinson

If you are tired of the general bill of fare at the local theatre, you might check out the Janus and a work of genius entitled "Andy Warhol's Frankenstein." In case you don't already know, the film has little connection with the famed Warhol other than the fact that it was made at his film factory and carries his name in the title. Otherwise this film is the product of Paul Morrissey, a one time protege and now partner of Warhol.

whereas Herr Dokktor has a gall bladder fetish which provokes him to utter such memorable phrases as "To know death is to fuck life in the gall bladder." The mere utterance of this profundity provides the loyal Igor with the impetus to try to imitate the good Dr. and thus blow everything.

Without a doubt, there are thousands of persons who have found this film to be nothing more than an outrageous exercise in offending our more tender sensibilities. While I would be among the first to censor the film for showing on prime time television on Halloween, I feel that its patent offensiveness is what makes it brilliant. Morrissey has simply taken the violence and sex which permeates movies and television and reduced it to the level at which it is more comprehensible, absurdity. The film is a conglomeration of the types of malaise that confront us everyday. It is a study in human nature and behavior. It is a comedy which allows us to laugh at our own demented tastes in audio-visual stimulation. I am eagerly looking forward to "Andy Warhol's Dracula", "Andy Warhol's Wolfman", "Andy Warhol's As the World Turns", "Andy Warhol's Medical Center",.....

Sebo commented that there has been some confusion about the election procedure for seats in the North Carolina Assembly. Guilford County elects seven House members and three Senators. There are six contestants for the three Senate seats, three Democratic and three Republican. The top three vote-getters are the winners, and no candidate runs against any other specific candidate. She states, that, "if anybody is running against anybody, its against the other party."

One of the areas that Sebo is strongly concerned about is the North Carolina Public Education System. Almost half of the state's budget is spent on the educational system, but the students' basic educational skills are below the national average. She feels that the situation is improving, as many programs are being expanded and a schoolhouse bond issue has been passed, but much needs to be done in the areas of career education, improved textbook selection, expansion of school construction, and broadening educational services.

Another area in which Sebo feels that change is necessary is that of campaign financing and ethics review. The present ceiling on campaign contribu-
