Neutron Bomb Abandonment?

By JOOST de WIT

Amsterdam, March 18.

An estimated forty to fifty thousand people took part in a demonstration against the neutron bomb in Amsterdam. The demonstrators marched up to the Jaap Endenhall, where only a small number could fit inside. Many thousands stood outside and listened to the speeches through loudspeakers.

One of the speakers was the Russian cosmonaut Oleg Markarov. He declared that introduction to the neutron bomb would speed up the armament contest, while results are showing in the process of disarmament. In his opinion the Americans are trying to make believe that atomic weapons are not more harmful than a rifle.

The manifestation followed an international forum against the bomb in the RAI hall, with about 1500 participants from thirty different countries. The American Daniel Ellsberg, formerly working with the Pentagon, said that in his opinion the neutron bomb would have been used in Korea and Vietnam if the United States had had one at that time. According to Ellsberg, his country had been ready to use atomic bombs. It decide not to, considering the extent of radiation and the political repercussions this would have had.

In a collective statement, the participants of the forum call on all governments to abandon the bomb, and to take notice of the wide protest movement.

Quartet to Sing at Guilford

The Toscana String Quartet will present an informal concert at 6 p.m. in the Boren Lounge, Monday, April 10. Their hour-long program will include music by Mozart, Verdi, Brahms, Puccini, Rossini, and Purcell.

The members of the quartet — Estelle Gibbs, Judy Cloud, Louis Turner, and Willie Drake — come from different parts of the country but all have done graduate or post-graduate work at the North Carolina School of the Arts.

The concert will be informal, so that you can drop in for a while even if you can't stay for the entire program. Light refreshments will be served.

This concert and the mime performance last week are part of an effort by a group here at Guilford to bring more fine arts events to the school and to make them more accessible to students. As part of the same series, on the following Monday at 6 p.m. a classical guitar student will play in Boren Lounge.
