

Guilfordian suggestions

Each week, the Guilfordian will ask a question of students and others in the Guilford community. The participants will be selected at random and their answers recorded and transcribed. It is hoped that this column will inspire further discussion on issues of concern to the community.

I think that the paper serves three roles. It should be an information giving document, a conscious raising publication and an entertaining publication.

As far as the first role is concerned I would like to see it have factual information of upcoming event of interest to the entire community. That means meetings and performances on campus, as well as items that will take place in the community that would be of interest to the Guilford College constituency. I would also hope that it would be able to give a review of meetings, decisions, etc. that have happened on campus.

As far as the consciousness raising responsibility I think the paper has the particular ability to stimulate thought among students and faculty and to stimulate ideas regarding concerns of the campus. It should be a catalyst for thought and for discussion. I would like to see it represent all sides of an issue, that is pro and con from student, faculty and administrators. It ought to be willing to have an opinion itself, that is from the editors of the newspaper.

It's third function as an entertaining publication ought to reflect a humorous outlook. There are different ways to look at issues and one way is to balance the serious with a humorous aspect to represent some levity in situations I think that humor tends to equalize ones perspective on an issue.

As far as suggestions, perhaps my suggestions reflect hope. I hope there will be as many students as possible to contribute if not in active positions, at least through letters to the editor.

I think it is important to have a campus newspaper and that students, faculty and administrators should feel free to contribute to it.

First I would like to congratulate the people who are working on the paper. I looked at the first edition and read through most of it and it looks like a good job to me. I'm mighty glad to see it going again. I was asked to make some comments on what I thought the paper could or should do here on the campus. First thing that comes to mind is that it could enable the people here on campus to know each other better. It would serve as a medium for giving us a chance to know what other people are doing, what they're like, what they're thinking about, what their plans are, what their disappointments are and what kind of life they're leading. That would include everybody: students, faculty and staff. I think some of the things done in the past and even earlier in the year, I found very useful.

Secondly, it can let us know what is going on around campus. That seems like a fairly trite statement but we have the campus calendar. That tells you what's going on but that's just the bare bones of the story. What we need is the meat and flesh on the bones to tell us the things that are going on in detail. That would include the things that are going on in detail. That would include the things that are going to happen and also some sort of critique, review or analysis of things that have happened. That is my second point.

I think another thing that could be done is to analyze the documents that the college produces. What about the catalogue, what do you think about it? What about the president's annual report, is it fact or fiction? And what about other things that are going on? All of this could be looked into in a positive constructive way to make the paper something people would look forward to reading. I think it could constantly test opinion to see what is going on and what people are thinking about on campus.

I think the paper should offer some training to students interested in journalism because anything you can pick up and find out about to see if you like it would be of help to the future of the students on campus. Some people in other places have gone on to careers in journalism. I think the Guilfordian could at least offer an understanding of what it's all about, deadlines, lay out, that sort of thing.

These aren't lengthy things but this is what I think is important as far as the Guilfordian goes.

I think the Guilfordian should let people know what students are involved with off campus as well as on campus. This should definitely include more than just academic matters.

By JOHN BAILEY

The Guilfordian should serve as a connection between the administration and the students. It should aid in the communication of the entire school. I don't know if it's possible, but I think each department of the school should run an article to enable the entire student body to be aware of activities in the school. Also advertisements may help with financing the publication of the paper. I would also like to see more indepth sports coverage.

By DON BASNIGHT

I would suggest that the Guilfordian provide more information about events and things that are going on with the people in the school.

For example I know some people who have won dance contests. Maybe they should go around and ask people about different topics and see how they feel about things.

There should be more coverage of intermural sports and activities. They should pick up on spontaneous things like the food fight in the cafeteria. They should check out issues like the food in the cafeteria besides what work committees are doing and make students aware of what the student government is and isn't doing.

By JOHN ANDERSON

I think the main point the Guilfordian should get across is that it should keep everyone informed of current events in the Guilford community. I think there should be an entertainment sector with events in the college area: Greensboro, High Point, Winston-Salem. They should keep up the sports section because I really like sports. And maybe there should be individual sections for all the departments so that students can know what is going on in History or Economics departments. I think the paper should just keep up with current events and let people know what is going on around campus.
