The T. Gilbert Pearson Chapter of the National Audobon Society is sponsoring the third in a series of four Audobon Wildlife Films to be shown at the Centenary United Methodist Church at 2300 West Friendly Avenue.

The film, "Into Australia's Red Centre," portrays the wildlife of a dry land gone wet: the Outback during the wettest year of the century in Australia. It will be shown at 8 p.m. tonight in the Fellowship Hall.

Filmed and personally narrated by Greg and Linda MacMillan, "Into Australia's Red Centre" documents the varied wildlife of Down Under, including the usual koala bears and kangaroos, but also the mallee fowl, fairy penguins, emus, and parrots.

The group making the trip began their trek at Sydney, went south to Melbourne, and then turned north for the Outback. They crossed Alice Springs, several national parks, and Mt. Isa, to arrive at the tropical northeastern coast. It resembled crossing the U.S. from Florida to Nebraska to New England in the direction and distance, but in no other way.

A fifth Audobon Wildlife Film is being co-sponsored by the Biology Department of N.C. A&T University and the T. Gilbert Pearson Chapter. Entitled "Designs for Survival," the film explores various animals' adaptations for movement, feeding, protection, and reproduction. It includes footage of the amazing angler fish, with its built-in fishing pole and bait, the African chameleon, the gopher turtle, and others.

The film will be presented in Barnes Hall Auditorium at 8 p.m. on Friday, March 21.

Linda and Grey McMillan captured the beauty of the Australian Outback on film in the Audobon Wildlife Film "Into the Red Centre."

The fairy penguin is one of the many fascinating creatures which the MacMillans encountered on their Australian journey.

NC PIRG probes energy issues

The Guilford College and UNC-G chapters of the North Carolina Public Interest Research Group (NC PIRG) will sponsor a day of workshops on "Energy Issues," Saturday, March 22 from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in Room 116 of the Petty Science building on the UNC-G campus.

Suzanne Sullivan, Guilford PIRG spokesperson, said, "I see this workshop as an essential educational tool in preparing people for the March 28 action. The purposes of that action will be to commemorate the Three Mile Island accident and to publicize the April 26 march on Washington."

The schedule for the workshops is:

11:00am-12:15pm -- Dr. Gerald Meisner, UNC-G Physics Dept., "The Effects of Radiation on Human Health"

12:15pm-1:00pm -- Lunch and Discussion

1:00pm-2:00pm -- Dr. Robert Williams, Guilford College Economics Dept., "The Economics of Nuclear Power."

2:00pm-3:00pm -- Wells Edelman, NC PIRG Staff Scientist and energy consultant, "Renewable Energy Sources and Conservation."

Guilford students wanting to attend the workshops may reserve free transportation by either calling the local PIRG office, 852-3811, or by signing-up at the PIRG office on the second floor of Founders Hall.

Wonderful Wednesday?

Questionnaires on use of Wednesday were distributed during the week of March 10 to Main Campus students and to faculty members. This survey is being conducted by a subcommittee of the faculty curriculum committee as an initial step in the evaluation of so-called "Wonderful Wednesday."

The questionnaire is designed to gather two types of information: data on the activities in which students and faculty participate during the daytime on Wednesday and their attitudes toward changing the present situation. In addition to asking specific questions, the form provides space for written comments.

Members of the "Wednesday" subcommittee are Charles Almy, Mary Greenawalt, and Floyd Reynolds. They seek the cooperation of faculty and main campus students in turning in the questionnaires by Friday, March 21.

GP News Service

Early Sunday morning, all eleven residents of George White House were found slain in what appears to be the largest mass murder in Guilford College history.

No suspects have yet been written up in connection with the grisly crime, many details of which are being withheld from the press. Security guards are following up several leads, however, which seem to point to the existence of a bizarre cult in the college area. Quotations from Fleetwood Mac's Tusk album were found written in blood on some of the walls, and the victims seem to have been killed in an almost ritualistic fashion with a variety of weapons, suggesting the presence of more than one murderer.

A visit to the scene of the crime Sunday afternoon after the remains of the former residents had been removed, was unnerving. The silence was eerie. Trails of dried blood lead throughout the house; bloodstained knives, scissors, and Bic pens had been covered with plastic and labeled by the investigating guards, all of whom expressed shock and grief at the tragedy.

Security arrived at the house after being paged by a suspicious neighbor. One guard, the first to discover the bodies, had this to say: "I was horrified. In all my years on security I have never seen bodies mutilated more brutally. Some had been cut up into pieces. There was blood everywhere. In the living-room, someone had written "tusk" in blood on the wall. I was sick to my stomach several times during the initial investigation."

Despite the blatant and overt nature of this ghastly crime, security is baffled as to the identity of the culprits. "This is just something no one would have expected to happen at Guilford," one guard admitted.

The eleven bodies were identified as Ben Frothingham, Steve Hardy, Jim Henniger, Randy Holder, Chip Loughlin, Steve Marler, Bill Meikrantz, Mike Perlis, Mike Sieverts, Karl Stephan, and Paul Swain.

Friends and acquaintances are invited to the house Saturday night, March 22nd, for a memorial party whose theme will be, appropriately, death. Keg contributions are asked for in lieu of flowers. Appropriate attire is requested.

Facts of rape

Rape is one of the most rapidly growing crimes in America, and yet few rapists are ever brought to trial. What conditions contribute to this dual problem?

How can private citizens protect themselves against this most vicious of attacks? What can a victim do to help the police capture the attacker? How can parents protect their children against violation? What special problems are faced by the handicapped and elderly with regard to rape?

The Greensboro RAPE Center is giving a free public lecture for people interested in the problem of rape in Greensboro. This presentation will serve as an educational lecture open to the general public and as the first in a series of five lectures in our speakers training program.

The presentation, sponsored by the UNC-G Womens Studies Program, will be held on Friday, March 28, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. at UNC-G's Elliott University Center, in Joyner Lounge. The powerful new film, The Rape Victims, will be shown with a brief discussion of the facts regarding rape and recent national statistics on it. Refreshments will be served. Subsequent meeting dates in the series will be scheduled to meet the needs of interested participants.

The series of five lectures will include four initial sessions centered on facts regarding rape, and on training in public speaking techniques. A fifth practice session will include participation in the presentation of a brief public lecture.

The RAPE Center urges you to take this opportunity to attend the March 28 lecture. There is no obligation to complete the program, but we are sure the lecture will be interesting and informative for men and women of all ages and backgrounds. Useful rape prevention techniques will be discussed, and questions answered. For information about the series, call 379-5229
