Academic Dean search begins

•A search to fill Kathy Adams' position has already brought in 75 applications.

A national search is currently underway at Guilford to find candidates for the school's next academic dean, after Kathy Adams, the current dean, retires to return to teaching.

A search committee has been operational since around the first of November, according to Provost Dan Poteet. The committee "solicits applications, screens and evaluates [the applications] and makes a recommendation to the president."

This recommendation may be anywhere from one name to a few different names. The president will then submit his choice to the board of trustees, who will finally approve it.

Candidates are found through ads placed "in the appropriate journals," according to Poteet, and by "contacting people we know who might be candidates or be sources of information on candidates."

Two hundred applicants is not an unusual amount. According to Poteet, the search has only just started, and around 75 applications have been received.

History Professor Martha Cooley heads the search committee. According to Cooley, there are 8 members. They include Poteet, Marlene McCauley, Garland Granger, Mel Keiser, Cathy West, and two students: Kim Jarres and Chris Behm.

The criteria, according to Poteet, include "strong academic credentials, successful teaching experience, successful administrative experience, commitment to liberal arts education, sensitivity to Quaker philosophy and practice, sensitivity to issues of gender and ethnicity."

While there is "no way to know yet" the outcome of the search, Poteet predicts they could possibly have an offer ready by early March. The new dean would start the first of July.

Kathy Adams, the current dean, says she is ready to leave the position of the academic dean, a post she has held for three years.

Originally, the position was supposed to be temporary, after the previous dean, Sam Schumann, left. She was the logical choice as she had worked with the dean on numerous occasions before. However, she "misses the students" and says she looks forward to going back to teaching in the psychology department at Guilford.

SENATE ESSENTIALS

COMPILED BY SECRETARY
WADE TOMLINSON

The Senate Secretary position was filled today without further discussion.

Senate Hot line? Senate now has a hot line that any student can call to get information or state concerns. The extension number is x2310.

GLBA and FLAG have received approval to rearrange their existing budgets to fund a RESOURCE CENTER. This center will provide the space necessary to hold support groups, house information on related job openings, and phone numbers for community awareness.

Advertisement! Advertisement was brought up at today's meeting. The question is how to make advertising events more accessible. The present system is not effective. Further discussion is expected.

Exec. Reports:

Teri Freeman - a forum is planned to make the issue of Guilford's proposed smoking policy aware to students. The projected date is tentatively scheduled for Jan. 18.

Wade Tomlinson - Too many absences have led to the threat that at three unexcused absences the position for senator will be reopened. We need all senators to attend.

Community Reports:

Environmental Concerns - Forum went well, according to Chair Melissa Hoopes.

Student Loan Fund Auction - Each senator is expected to visit and solicit funds for the auction that will take place next semester.

Special Projects - Some constitution revisions are under way. A report on changes are expected soon.

SRC committee - Off campus policy has been reviewed and changed.

Community Concerns - Assault task force has ensued following the rape forum. Possible future forums include one on racial issues and one on dissection.

Budget Committee - NCSL and sports management budgets were passed as well as eight others that were passed upon proposal (suspending the Guy Vitaglione amendment).
