CAMPUS SECURITY REPORT

The following are just a few of the reported incidents that were investigated by Security from February 5 to February 12, 1997.

Larcenies

On Sunday, February 9, Security was called to investigate a larceny that occurred in the men's Lacrosse team's locker room at Ragan Brown Field House. Property belonging to members of the team has been stolen from the locker room. This incident was investigated by Security and reported to the Greensboro Police Department. There are no suspects in this case.

On Monday, February 10, a student reported that her residence hall keys had been stolen from Hendricks while she worked her work study job. There are no suspects in this case.

Attempted Unauthorized Entry

On Friday, February 7, Security investigated a report of an attempted unauthorized entry into a residence on campus. Judicial charges are pending in this case.

If you have any information on the above cases, you are asked to report them to 316-2909. You do not have to leave your name.

 Tracy Welch Mills, Security Supervisor

Security Awareness Tip:

According to NC General Statute 14.269.2, it is unlawful for any person to possess any firearm (to include air rifles and B.B. guns) in any public or private school building or bus, campus grounds, recreation area, athletic field, or other property used or owned by an educational institution.

Student violators are also subject to charges through the campus judicial system.

Students speak out at forum about changes

Bill McCord
 staff writer

A forum of approximately eighty students and faculty convened on Monday, February 10, in the cafeteria to discuss the broad five-point interdisciplinary curriculum changes devised by a faculty and student-represented curriculum committee.

The forum drew many frank and honest opinions from people grappling with hard questions that Guilford College, as an institution distinct from others, must answer in the preceding years.

Questions ranged from "What does a Guilford liberal art education mean?" "What is its value both at Guilford and after college?"

Co-facilitated by first-year student Jessie White, and Adele Wayman, Clerk of the Faculty and Art Professor, the forum was conducted in the manner of a Society of Friends business meeting.

With what Cory Birdwhistell, student representative on the committee, deemed "the educational future of Guilford" before the forum, and a moment of silence, the floor was opened to student's questions and opinions.

These were directed to students, and attentive-but-silent faculty members, covered a gamut of issues.

Despite different objections to the character and necessity of some core requirements, (such as the foreign language, First Year Seminar, and Interdisciplinary Studies requirements), many students emphasized the value and breadth of their core requirements, and even suggested more choices.

These classes, even if not applicable to a student's major, were considered essential to a liberal arts education.

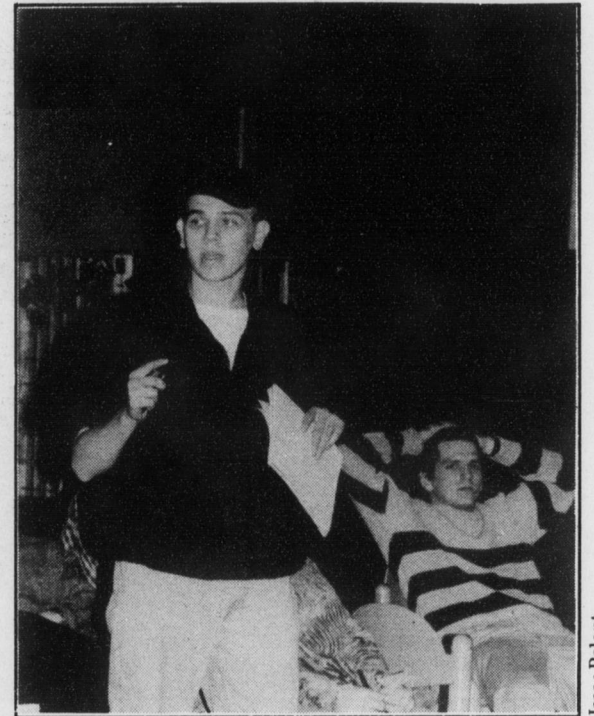

Students felt that a study of a variety of disciplines might reveal connections and continuity between different areas of knowledge, and perhaps revive the meaning of a liberal arts education.

Buoying these general sentiments were new and original ideas to be dutifully considered. A Theory and Practice component, which incorporates a compulsory class, internship, or some equivalent into the academic career, was considered valuable.

A suggestion for the abolition of the grading system, in favor of written evaluations, was offered as well, although this is not a part of the current curriculum revisions.

What impact the forum will

actually have upon the curriculum changes is not known. There was no dialogue between faculty members and students, but the debate and discussion was heartfelt. If anything, the forum should gauge the quality and characters of Guilford College students during a time of such essential reflection and change.

Note: Any first-year students who would like to have a say about the Curriculum Proposals, call Anne Lundquist in the First Year Center or Marc Bernstein at x3848.

Robbery in locker room shocks team

Tim Forbes
 staff writer

On Sunday, 14 wallets were stolen from the men's lacrosse locker room. The larceny occurred while the team was practicing from 2:30-4:30.

Over $50 in cash was taken, but driver's licenses, credit cards, and ATM cards were also stolen.

"It is not so much the money, but it is a pain to get a new driver's license, cancel my credit cards, and buy a new wallet," sophomore Tim

Gerbracht said.

There was no sign of forced entry and the team returned from practice to find the locker room door unlocked. It is believed that the perpetrator has a key of some kind.

This is not the first time something like this has occurred. Last fall the same locker room, then occupied by the football team, was broken into during a game. In this incident there was again no forced entry.

A source at the YMCA believes the perpetrator has close relations to the school and knows the lacrosse team's schedule.

The locker rooms are adjacent to the YMCA, where hundreds of people have access to the facilities. Marcus Harvey who is the supervisor of the security control room said, "It is an unusual situation because there is so much public access to Ragan Brown Field house."

Security did not have a report ready at the time this article was being prepared and presently the perpetrator is unknown.
