

THE GOOFORDIAN

Greensbored, NC

March 29, 2002

Bush and bin Laden take X, resolve differences

Jared Axelrod
and Katy Wurster
PILOTS, SPACESHIP EARTH

For perhaps the first time in history, Washington D.C. drug dealers have done more to influence international affairs than corporate lobbyists.

The 'war on terror' is over, as is the war on drugs, thanks to the new understanding President Bush and Osama bin Laden reached last weekend with the help of a little white pill.

"My daughters, Jenna and Barbara, have been raving about ecstasy for years," said Bush at yesterday's press conference. "Now, I don't usually dabble in the kid stuff, but from what they told me, it seemed like just what we needed."

"I've never felt closer to the Great Satan," said bin Laden, casually running his hands up and down his furry vest. "And when we peaked at the same time, it was totally awesome."

Both Bush and bin Laden spoke extensively of their newly enlightened perspectives on war, terrorism, and the differences between their two nations.

"Bombs are silly," giggled

JARED AXELROD

The one point of dissension: Bush said Moby was a sellout; bin Laden called him "totally PLUR-y."

bin Laden. "It's like, PLUR, you know? Peace, love, unity, and respect, dog. I told George I was sorry about that whole hating America thing. Now I can see that it was totally out of synch with the world harmonies."

"What's past is past," responded Bush. "We need to live in the present, and focus on spreading love and happiness to every corner of Spaceship Earth. Hey, quit hogging the water."

The ensuing peace talks were deejaayed by Paul Oakenfold. A soundtrack will be released by the end of next month, with remixes by BT and Tino Maas.

"I have a newfound respect for bin Laden and his perspective," said Bush. "How could he be evil when his beard is soft, so soft?"

Yearning for Yanni:

WQFS shifts to easy listening/new age

Daniel Fleishman, Katy Wurster and Sam Stephens
[INSERT FUNNY TITLES HERE]

WQFS, the Guilford College radio station, announced last week that it will soon switch over to an easy listening/new age music station.

James Fishwick, senior and WQFS program director, called their reasoning strategic. "The baby boomers are hitting 60 this year, and we decided that the best way to become a truly great organization would be to tap into that enormous resource," he said.

Beginning April 15, you'll be able to enjoy hits from favorite artists including Yanni, Solas, Secret Garden and John Tesh.

"We're also trying now to bring in the vast bank of young professionals that have recently found Greensboro an exciting place to work and live," said Michela Maxwell, junior and general manager of the station.

JUSTIN BETSON

Punkster Laurah Norton is currently installing an automated body-rolling mechanism for her future grave.

"We've finally come to the realization that the punk and experimental eras are over," she said. "It was a shock to the system, but now we feel better knowing that at last our ratings will improve."

WQFS has begun a con

See WQFS, p. 2

HEADLINES

See special pullout section

*Guilford celebrates school's thousandth lesbian, tenth gay male

*Senate committee convenes

*McNemar frowns; "Uh oh," realizes Chief Financial Officer Phil Manz

*Caf worker forced to reswipe Smart Card

*Old white guy hired for administrative position

*Guilford Preschool to open next fall; revenue to support "marble step fund"

*Retention committee transfers

*Apartment resident tries to get on meal plan; Liz Nemitz escapes after 7 months of bagels, peanut butter

*Nate Finley puts "stud" in Student Union

*Bryan suite B-12 breaks from study parties

Please
Use This
As Toilet
Paper