Vandalism in Hege Cox threatens student art

GUILFORDIAN STAFF REPORT

Hege Cox has been the site of three incidents of vandalism this year.

Most recently, faculty discovered spray paint tagging, destruction of a print and clay sculpture, and green paint thrown around the studios after Halloween night. Some of the vandalism is still on display as staff and faculty work to unmask the red spray paint both on- and in-building that reads, "love ya muffins."

"In no one's memory has there been this much destructiveness in a single year at Hege Cox," reads the e-mail the art department faculty sent on Nov. 5 warning all students in art classes. Faculty had already discussed these problems with their classes earlier in the semester.

Though faculty sent the e-mail to art students, the letter acknowledges the anonymity of the acts and proposes the possibility that art students did not vandalize the building.

"We don't know that is all art students since often friends of students hang around the building and think of the studios as a place to hang out," said David Newton, assistant professor of art.

Newton hypothesizes that perhaps students "see messiness (in the studio) and don't understand the limit," and that this notion of mess contributes to the fact that students have targeted the art department.

"I think the new students get a little too happy and a little too drunk, plus they don't know how special Hege Cox is," said senior art major

LEGENDARY QUARTERBACK VOGELBACH WRAPS UP SENIOR SEASON WITH SENSATIONAL STATS

Story by Will Cornelius

Senior quarterback Josh Vogelbach has more than proven himself to be the most prolific quarterback in Guilford College history.

During his impressive tenure, Vogelbach has set 17 National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) records ranging from single-game and season records for attempts and touchdowns to career records for passing yards and total offense.

Vogelbach's remarkable march through the record books is certainly a credit to his individual ability, but is also a tremendous tribute to the players around him.

"I was blessed," said Vogelbach. "There has been a good team here all four years, and I was just fortunate to have an offensive line that gave me time to throw, and receivers that made plays. It feels good (to break those records), and it's a privilege to hold those honors, but my team deserves that honor just as much as I do."

"It's great to see Vogelbach's individual success, but they are just a few of the many offensive records we have set as a team," said offensive coordinator and quarterback coach Mark Hargis.

After last week's record-breaking performance during the homecoming loss to Catholic University, Vogelbach received a "Helmet Sticker" on ESPN's College Football Final, a show dedicated to the accomplishments and highlights of college football around the country.

Helmet stickers are distributed weekly, honoring players who deliver stellar performances on Saturday.

A historic election is only the beginning

By Tristan Dewar

Barack Obama is the first black American elected president of the United States. He is the first ethnic minority to become head of state of any democratic nation.

His rise to the most powerful office in the land is a watershed event in our history and holds immeasurable significance for black Americans and oppressed peoples not only in this country, but also all over the world.

Only a handful of years ago, few would have dreamed that a black man might assume the office of president in a country marred by a sordid history of racism and discrimination.

His story, for many, exemplifies the American Dream.

But for just as many, the American Dream remains an intangible and impossible goal. We're told that only hope and a raw desire to do better are required for success. It's the Great American Way, the old idea that upward mobility simply
