Desire

Fully-dressed, you walk along the edge of the pool, feeling the draw of disaster – ruined shoes, soaked wallet, short-circuited cell phone – yet you skirt the brim just to see the girl up close. The curves and the margins draw you in – cheekbones, eyelids, breasts, corners of her mouth – and her gravity pulls you to the brink. Longing is too weak a word to convey the clutching in the back of your throat, a grip that radiates down through your corporeal core, destabilizing your knees, endangering not only the integrity of your possessions, but the very stability of your soul. Beauty comes in myriad forms, and if you see it in the girl, you can see it in the delicate flower, the fine feather, the split rock, the tickle of words conveying truth – it inundates every molecule of your being. No, you will not publicly baptize yourself in humility, nor taste the cherry dangling just out of reach. Simply behold – your spirit soaking in the wonder of your parched restraint.
