LITMAG CLIPPINGS

Brought to you by The Greenleaf Review

In Other Words

Before I go, would you please tell me about our times at the vineyards in Paris, how we almost got arrested by that one gendarme because we made fun of his silly comb-over. Tell me about Venice, Dublin, Bangkok, and all the other places we toured together to find a small spot to call home. Tell me about our first kiss, how we thought our passion really did light up the sky, but then we realized it was the 4th of July. Remind me of how, regardless of where we were, we would dance through adventure as if it were a ballroom. Our home, tell me about our cottage 20 miles outside of London we settled down in, raising two nettled-haired children who explored the fields out back like it were their own France, Italy, or Thailand. Regale me with all our exploits between countries, children, and sheets.

In other words, lie to me.
