Since the start of the spring semester, there has been talk about the potential for presidential candidates remaining anonymous.

However, according to a March 21 announcement in The Beacon, Guilford College's next top administrator will not be cloaked in anonymity.

Open campus interviews are planned for April 1-3 for the three candidates recommended by the presidential search committee to the board of trustees.

"The identities of the finalists will be announced Monday, March 31," said Vice President of Communications and Marketing Ty Buckner.

Students, faculty, staff and community leaders will have sessions with each candidate, and all will have the opportunity to give trustees their input through an online survey.

From April 1-3, there will be open faculty and staff sessions. Candidate presentations will be held from 10-10:45 a.m. in the Moon Room of Dana Auditorium and 2-2:50 p.m. in Bauman Gallery East in Founders Hall.

Student sessions will be held from 11-11:40 a.m. each day.

The trustees, who will select the next president, are scheduled to meet Saturday, April 5, at the Community Center to discuss the candidates.

Some speculate that a final decision will be made at that meeting.

Candidates will also meet with senior staff, the clerk of the faculty, Clerk's Committee and Academic Division chairs, members of the board of visitors, alumni, community leadership and trustees, as well as President and Professor of Political
