

SALEM JOKES.

Professor—"No, I mean the first human being, the first man."

Eliza—"Oh, George Washington, first in war, first in....."

Professor—"No, no, I mean Adam, of course."

Eliza—"Oh, I didn't know you were talking about foreigners."

Alice Belle Rulfs

Professor—"Alice, who is the most popular man in town?"

Alice—"Mr. Sam Welfare."

Professor—"Why?"

Alice—"Because he is such a good mixer."

Elizabeth Griffin (Pud.)

Professor—"Please translate the first lines of Virgil's 'Arma virumque.'"

Elizabeth—"She, she, threw her arms around his neck—that's as far as I got, professor."

Professor—"Well, that's far enough, Elizabeth."

Julia Bethea (History)

Prof.—Whom do the ancients say supported the world on his shoulders?

Julia—Atlas.

Prof.—And who supported Atlas?

Julia—His wife supported him.

Rosa James.

Prof.—When the rain falls, does it ever rise again?

Rosa—Yes, sir, in dew time.

Alice Lyerly

Prof.—What does Ed. Shepherd say about marriage?

Alice—He says that the groom is more expensive than the bride.

Prof.—How's that?

Alice—He says that the bride is always given away but the groom is often sold.

Estelle McCanless.

Prof.—What's the difference between the north and south poles?

Estelle—All the difference in the world.

Ruth Crowell.

Prof.—What is the difference between stabbing a man and killing a hog?

Ruth—One is assault with intent to kill, the other is killing with the intent to salt.

Alice Rulfs.

Prof.—Why is Josephine Shaffner like a looking glass?

Alice—One reflects without speaking, the other speaks without reflecting.

Eliza Moore.

Prof.—What trees bears the most fruit to market?

Eliza—John Brown says it is the axle tree.

Elizabeth Zachary.

Prof.—Why are Salem Girls like arrows?

Eliz.—Because they can't go off without a beau and they're all in a quivver till they get one.

1st Fresh (seeing instructor enter class room with box of chalk)—Miss Jackson must be awful busy today.

2nd Fresh—How do you know.

1st Fresh—She is taking her lunch to class with her to save time.

Salem Girl—I want a pair of kid gloves.

Clerk—How long do you want them.

Salem Girl—All the time I want to buy them, not rent them.

Student (registering for second term)—I would rather take Pictish than any other language.

Miss F—Why do you choose that?

Student—There are only five words of it left.

Miss deB.—Did the war change the map of Africa?

Julia B.—Not the shape.

Raye D.—I thought bacteria made vinegar.

Juanita S. (deep in the study of her Biology notes)—They do, but the mosquito carries them.

Mrs. Herndon—Marjorie, why do you call me crystal?

M. B.—Because you are always on the watch.

JUNIORS HOSTESSES TO THE KIWANIS.

On Thursday evening the Kiwanis Club were dinner guests of the college, members of the Junior class acting as hostesses. After Rev. R. E. Gribben was invited to say the grace a menu of grapefruit, roast veal with dressing, mached potatoes, creamed asparagus, coffee with parker house rolls and lemon cream pie was served.

Miss Ruth Crowell, president of the Junior class, spoke a few words of welcome, which she said came from her heart, and President Barber, of the Kiwanians, gracefully responded. Mr. L. M. Shepard was elected pianist by acclamation, and led the singing of America and several rousing songs. Dr. Rondthaler being called upon for a few remarks responded in his usual happy vein, and pleased every one by announcing that Mr. L. M. Shepard had applied for the job as night-watchman at Salem and as he furnished excellent recommendations would probably be accepted, providing the faculty approved.

After each Junior had been presented carnations by the gallant Kiwanians, Mr. Douglas Rights directed a very clever stunt in which prominent Kiwanians masqueraded as members of the Junior class.

Mr. L. J. Heath sent greetings and said he was "all broken up" at not being able to be present, and in a "quiz" Misses Queen Graeber, Mary Warren, Katherine Denny and Alice Ross received prizes, while the Junior class as a whole, was presented by Mr. B. J. Pfohl with a handsome corsage of cabbage, onions, carrots and green peppers. The class response was a song to the Kiwanians.

After dinner a farce called "Here Comes the Bride" was presented for the pleasure of the guests in the college library. At the conclusion of the play a "good-night" song was sung and the gentlemen departed after voting the members of the class of 1923 ideal hostesses.
