Whatever else may be the quali-fications of an all-round student, one of the chief, we are sure, is de-pendability.

Miss Stipe said something the other night about livableness being one of the important qualities which go to make up "Salem Spirit." Size yourself up as regards your relationship with those around you. Are gou livable?

Departmental clubs will some begin melitre work for the wey peer, peer that we should comment here on their important part in the life of a college student. There stready exist clubs under direction of the case of the college student. There already exist clubs under direction of the and Home Economics, and at least one other is in a fair way of being organized. In some one of these, each student will likely have an interest; and membership will all but mention very particularly the History Club, for which registration day is being held the latter part of the current week. Interest in world and membership in the History Club makes possible the keeping in touch with things taking place outside the limited area of the college compus.
