DEAR SANTA

Editor's Note: This landed in the Salemite office. We feel flattered that Sadie thought the office was a chimney.

Dear Santa Claus:

It is nearly time for you to be making your rounds again, and I want to remind you, to be sure not to miss Salem College this year. There are many people here who are waiting anxiously for your visit, in hopes that you will bring them the things which they want most. In order to be sure that no one will be disappointed, I am going to tell you just what is expected of you.

Miss Forman wants an extra-sized bumper for Wendy, as the dear thing insists on going up on the sidewalk whenever she comes to a sharp curve.

Miss Day has been searching wildly for the fourth dimension, for ever so long, and I think it would be really nice of you, Santa, to bring it to her for Christmas. I can't describe it to you exactly, but perhaps you know just what it is that she wants.

Jennie Wolfe is pining away for her best beloved. Can't you see to it that he is put on the Christmas-tree for her?

A. P. Shaffner says his friends keep talking to her all the time, on the same subjects. The poor girl enjoys no rest whatever. Please bring her some new ones, either subjects or friends; she does look distressed.

Dr. Floyd is complaining that her most cherished hand-bag is wearing out. Bring her another one, Santa, please, and as nearly like the old one as possible.

Lardner McCarty, who has been losing weight at a truly alarming rate, wants a formula for gaining as rapidly as possible, preferably at the rate of about ten pounds a week.

A most awful thing happened the other day. Mr. Higgins lost his valuable assistant teacher, only temporarily, it is true, but lost her nevertheless. Santa, this is a big order, but can you bring Mr. Higgins another? You can't imagine how much he misses the one that is gone.

Ruth Pfaff told me the other day that she would like very much to have a good sized screen to use in class when she can't be bothered with what the professor is saying, and wants to do something else.

The Pierrette Players are anxious to have expressed to them without delay, an appreciative audience, which knows when to applaud, and is guaranteed not to laugh at the wrong place.

Do bring Lib Rondhaler a room with sound-proof walls. The poor child cannot sleep at night because inconsiderate people will make noise after 9 p. m.

I think that is all I have to tell you. Oh yes, I almost forgot. Det Stewers is tired of having ridiculous articles printed in the Salemite. She asked me in an agonized tone of voice to tell Santa Claus, please to bring her a new reporter who will keep to the straight and narrow path, without continually making vain and pathetic attempts to be funny.

Yours affectionately, dear Santa Claus,
—Scandalous Sadie.

THE ALMA MATER

Have you written an original Alma Mater? Salem needs your help and co-operation now. There is still time for each student to enter the contest. The copies will not be due until the end of the first week of the new semester. Are not Salem as original as those of other colleges? Now is the time to prove it!

A scientist has advised us that light is 19.8 miles a second slower than we had supposed. But the alarm clock goes off at the same old time.
—Charleston Gazette.

A man without nitric is like a wagon without springs, in which one is caused disagreeably to jolt by every pebble over which it runs.—Henry Ward Beecher.
