Vardell Continues Wagner Series

Lectures on "Die Walkure"

At the Thursday afternoon Musik-Hour, Dean Vardell continued the series of lectures he began last week on the Wagner music-dramas, "The Nibelungen Ring" when he spoke on "Die Walkure."

In order to understand the purport of "Die Walkure" as related to the "Ring," a certain amount of narrative is necessary which is not presented upon the stage.

Wotan, foretelling the doom of the gods because they are pledged to recognize the power of the magic ring, endeavors to protect Walkure by creating a band of Valkyria warrior maidens whose duty it is to convey on their winged steeds the bodies of the noblest warriors, slain upon the field of battle, to the abode of the gods, where these warriors will live again on a nightly race to defend Walkure. Upon the earth, also Wotan has bestowed his children of his son, Sigurd, and Sigmund, who grow up in ignorance of each other.

The opera begins with a prelude of very stormy music giving the effect of heavy driving rain and lightning. The scene of the three acts opens with a storm. When the prelude comes to an end, the curtain rises on the forest hut. Here Hunding, the warrior, is built around the great trunk of an ash tree, which pierces the center of the roof. Here Hunding, with his wife, Siegmund, who he has kidnapped against her will, is here, and the protector will be known by the name of Siegmund.

On the night when the scene opens, Hunding is away, and Siegmund appears in a state of exhaustion. He begs food and drink. It is Siegmund, a mortal enemy of Hunding, who has taken refuge here, hiding his face. Hunding, returning, finds him here and grants him hospitality for the night, but challenges him to combat the next morning. (Dean Vardell played the opening scene between the husband and wife in which looks figured rather than words.) Meanwhile, Siegmund and Siegmund are irrevocably drawn to each other. When Hunding returns, the woman prepares a sleeping potion which he boils in a stupor. She tells her story to Siegmund and they discover their near relationship. He finds that he can easily draw the sword from the place (it was Wotan who placed it there), and the two flee to the forest.

Mr. Vardell played several of the comments by the orchestra on the development of the drama. The motive of the husband; the glorious motive of the Valkyrie (the race that Wotan loved); the sword motive (which was heard at the end of "Das Rheingold"). It is made up of notes of the tonic chord played softly on the trumpet to suggest the flickering of the flames in the hearth; the Siegmund's love song in which the goddess winter out and brings back

Act II opens with music depicting flight. The scene is in a mountain pass. It has been the night of the storm, but his two children shall meet and mate, but he finds unexpected opposition to his plan from his wife's spouse. She is scandalized by this infraction of marital laws, and demands that he punish her for her infidelity. He is finally prevailed upon to summon Brunhilde, his favorite among the Valkyria maidens, and demands that she punish her for her infidelity. He is finally prevailed upon to summon Brunhilde, his favorite among the Valkyria maidens, and demands that she punish her for her infidelity. He is finally prevailed upon to summon Brunhilde, his favorite among the Valkyria maidens, and demands that she punish her for her infidelity.

Play Is Presented By French Club

Interesting Program Dis- tinguishes 1st Meeting

Le Cercle Francais had its first meeting of the year Friday afternoon at 7:30 p.m. in the faculty room. Katherine Lasater, Martha Binder, and Dean Patterson served the refreshments, and coffee.

Before the program there was a special business to be discussed. Protests against the League of Nations were read by the rest of the year.

The program consisted of the presentation of French of the title "The City Mouse and the Country Mouse," and a play, "Edna Higgins," by Jean Patterson. Our new French member, Mr. Downs, distinguished himself by guessing the title even before he was supposed to.

This was followed by hilarious French conversation. (Several fau-pas, by the way) and a contest on hyphenated words in which Margaret Ward and Jane Williams tied for the prize, a bunch of all-day suckers wrapped in bright cellophane.

Ansoncobe Speaks On World Events

Interesting Talk Heard at Y. P. M.

Wednesday morning at 10 Y. P. M. Dr. Ansoncobe spoke most interestingly on happenings in the world today.

Starting at home, he discussed President Roosevelt's talk last Sunday night. The President reviewed the progress of, and stated the ten illustrations of the National Recovery Act. He also made remarks concerning controlling currency. Even with a general survey of conditions, there is a confused idea of the meaning of a stabilizing currency. The United States was a larger volume of gold to back and redeem her paper money. No one knows how the value of a dollar will be settled in spite of the fact that the United States has free hand to settle the value of gold. Farmers are clamoring for inflation. Business men are asking that the present steady currency be annulled.

Dr. Ansoncobe then turned the attention of his audience to Russia. There has been recent correspondence between the U. S. government and Russia inviting Russia to send representatives to the League of Nations. Why has the United States hitherto not recognized Russia? Russia is a generally grown. Russia has the United States over five hundred million dollars second-hand goods are produced against the alleged communistic propaganda against the capitalist system and the religious system in Russia. Against these reasons are placed the following reasons:

1. Because Russia is not a democracy. 2. Because Russia has been in the past a country which has not paid debts; second, the United States was against the right of revolution. Can she deny this right to others? Third, Russia can be of financial benefit to the United States. Fourth, the United States has never before refused to recognize a defeated government. Russia has sent her representative to the United States.

Cuba is now in the midst of a revolution. The normal procedure in such American countries. In 1924, Machado was elected President for four years. In 1925, he was re-elected. He was today he is an exile. He has forced to flee because he has previously ruined the Cuban people and destroyed their rights, their liberty, and they property; he pushed the public to ruin. He controlled the army; he developed a secret police system which was nothing less than a system of terror against the people. He had profited nine million dollars from banks sold the United States. Roosevelt has not wanted to Cuba but has not have not wanted to.

The French government is now overthrown. There is no parliament, no premier. However, it is not such a disaster as when the French government fell—another government may be established in twenty-four hours. The French situation is a situation in Germany she is alarmed at the situation in the United States, at the fall of the franc, and at the approach of a depression.

Hitler is the outstanding person in Germany today. His plans are as follows: one, the return to prestige; two, to have the right to arm adequately; three, to send out his army now in Germany; four, to restore to Germany her lost colonies and borders; five, to restore military power; six, to restore a monarchy; seven, to create socialists and communists; and eight, to restore to 100 per cent. Treaty of Versailles—Treaty not only in business and social customs, but in religion. For the reason he is against the Jews.

This great man (the voice of a new generation in Germany, Hitler) leads for millions of young people. He has the support of the monarchy. He has the support of the capitalists, the militarists. He has withdrawn Germany from the League of Nations.

We are not taking Hitler seriously enough.

SENIOR CLASS ELECTIONS

At a meeting on Monday the senior class elected the following:

Academy Fashion Show Is Well Attended

Sosnik's, Craven's, Anchor and Ideal Display Dresses

The brilliant display of the latest fashions at the Academy Saturday night gave one impressions of Paton, Lolong, Vivonnet and even Adrian, Hollywood's famous designer.

The Auditorium formed a suitable setting for the fall fashions being decorated with gorgeously colored red, green, yellow and orange autumn leaves.

Sunny Kirby and Dorothy Moore played their music harmonizing with the moods and hours indicated by the styles displayed.

There was a delightful Parisian atmosphere. The Mannequins had poise and charm. Dorothy Everett, in a French outfit and belt, announced each model and occasioned a great deal of applause.

Beginning with morning dresses wool was very much in a mode. Helen wore a darling gowning with trimmings of white Angora. Next came the riding habits, an interesting one in which Barbara Fulton wore a Katherine Rees. Barbara Fulton came out in a dashing red and white gown to be followed by the models.

Next were the tea gowns. Both the late and evening gowns featured bright colors. The models were dressed in the latest. Black was strikingly evident. Helen wore a lovely gown in which Barbara Fulton was wearing a black tulle with matching tulle hat.

The dress costs were mostly long with peaked sleeves and interesting necklines, being fastened at the neck with a black ribbon or having small white fur collars.

The store represented were Sosnik's, Craven's, Anchor and Ideal.

Sophomores Entertain At Class Dinner

Interesting Banquet is Held On Thursday

Thursday night was a real housewarming for the sophomores. Although we didn't have any house at our own, we borrowed the recreation room. The room was decorated with red and white. There were two big tables decorated with red fall leaves and candles in our and a bouquet of flowers were all hand painted by Lois Torrence.

Instead of having a hired orchestra or other outside entertainment, we had a band of students. The band performed of singing and playing. Besides we all sang rounds and cheerleaders sang a song. The band and any body else who struck our fancy.

Each place the occupant found a small pile of footstools and a stack of chewing gum. Five kinds of animals were served. The band had one out at the table and at a given signal each person made her animal out of the chewing gum and took a picture. The prize was awarded to Louise Blum for a most original rat with spotted ears and a top hat. Nearly all of the campus students came and now the class is more united.
