UNIQUE COURSE ON PERSONAL BUDGET AT U. OF S. CALIF.

Editor's Note:—Recently the following information was received at NSFA headquarters from Norman Johnson, president of Associated Students at the University of Southern California, and chairman of the NSFA Pacific Region.

"It might be interesting to the news release to state that the University of Southern California College of Commerce has a course termed 'Personal Financial Planning' in which the student learns how to expend his money wisely after he graduates. The course is in no way purely a study in budgeting, for the lecturers, borrowed from all departments of the College of Commerce, teach the students the fundamentals of what it costs to live, how to buy food and clothing, how and when to buy an automobile, renting versus owning the home, how and when to buy a home (cost of it, construction and necessary precautions), how to purchase professional services (medicine and legal), and other subjects that will eventually stub every college student full in the face. In addition to teaching students how to spend money, it discusses the ways of establishing an estate for old age by buying real estate, stocks, bonds,

JUNIORS TO EDIT PAPER

For the next six or seven weeks the "Salemite" will be edited by Juniors. It has been the custom of the "Salemite" to let the Junior members of the editorial staff of the paper put out a copy of the paper during the spring. The first issue will be edited by Eloise Sample. Other staff members who will have an opportunity to edit the paper are: Louise Freeman, Peggy Brawley, Laura Bland, Cramer Percival, Anna Wray Fogle, and Florence Joyner.

Here's wishing these girls lots of success and may they realize the work and the responsibility there is in editing a college newspaper.

insurance, etc. The course, under Professor Ewart's direction, is highly attended and will, because of its vitally necessary field of study, prove to be a phenomenon of college in that students just won't ditch this subject."
