ATHLETICS ARE ON UPBEAT AT SALEM

Tennis has shown that Salem has not really become a Female Academy. There still lurks a desire, though somewhat suppressed, to engage in activities fiercer than the dance. The past few days have seen the courts crowded with fairly decent tennis players, and we might venture to say that the athletic field is beginning to resemble a public playground.

On Wednesday, some able representatives defeated an envoy from Dormitory students at Newcomb College, New Orleans, have devised a type of "sweetheart insurance" which, they believe, will eliminate rivals in affairs of the heart.

Should a student suddenly become unpopular and wait to no avail for phone calls from her "steady" she can consult the dormitory "date book."

There, in black and white, she may discover the trouble. For in that book are recorded all dates of dormitory girls, with the exact time of departure and return and the name of the escort.

Failure to sign out, or errors in signing, are taken up by the Campus Honor society and delinquents are confined to the campus for several days.

There is a way to beat the game, however. If one girl's boy friend takes a fancy to another of the students, the "chisellers" can have a strolling date on the large campus, in accordance with regulations, without recording the meeting.—A. C. P.

the Hanes High School. Some of the matches were rather close, but our always unconquerable team came through.

We greet with joy this newly revived interest in sports, and wonder if tennis is succeeding so well simply because it only takes two to play. We hope (we might go so far as to pray) that this is not the case. We prefer to consider it a genuine interest in active sports at last breaking through a year of suppression. Next year will tell.

Life is too short to engage in useless arguments.

A cow enameled in the living room of Phi Kappa Pi fraternity house at Beloit (Wis.) college surprised the housemother when she came down stairs on a recent morning.

A note attached to one of the cow's horns said: "This little cow walks in her sleep. If she walks into your house, scold her and return her to the south side of town."—A. C. P.

MISS AVERILL WINS BOND

Miss Averill has received word that she has won the $50 U. S. Defense Bond prize for entering students having the best posture in colleges with registration under 1000.

Those girls who were in the contest were: Mary Jane Copenhaver, Mary Eaton and Jane Strohm. These girls were chosen for general attractiveness, good figures, personality and good grooming as well as good posture. The photographs were judged according to general interest, dramatic quality, general attractiveness and cleanness.

The contest was sponsored by the Samuel Higby Comp. Institute. Judges included Mr. E. W. Yeend, physical education instructor of New York University; Mr. William Saunders, physical education director, High School of Commerce, New York, and Regional Director Civilian Defense Physical Fitness Program; also Mrs. Harriet McCormick, instructor in physical education, Teacher's College, Columbia University.

What senior, whose initials are L. B. was disappointed by the fact that her date didn't take her to the Rainbow Room for dinner, when Miss Averill and Corinne Faw were all set to be chaperones?

DR. ANSCOMBE

(Continued From Page One) be a long struggle, a shifting of values, and a change in our present mode of life which will at first be hard to accept. And Europe, while maintaining the existing cultures, must be ready to sacrifice. But after these changes do finally come about, the world may rest from the series of wars that has been weakening her.

This was the gist of Dr. Ancombe's lecture. It was indeed timely, and it is unfortunate that there weren't more ardent students present to get the grim picture of the world and life that lies in the future for all of us.
